Practice Helps Develop Good Driving Habits

Proficiency in anything requires practice, and that includes safe driving techniques. "Most drivers are quick to learn the manual part of operating a vehicle. Not as many apply that knowledge in a mature, level-headed manner, practicing every day to be a better driver," pointed out California Highway Patrol Commissioner Bradford M. Crittenden.

"Observing speed limits, allowing a safe following distance, and signalling every intention to change position or direction of the vehicle are a few important indications of the practiced motorist's approach to legal, safe driving.

"On the other hand, the person who edges over the speed limit, shifts abruptly from lane to lane without warning, or 'tail-gates' the car ahead is demonstrating his lack of ability in the really skillful part of driving. He has not learned that, because accident-causing situations can arise at any moment, the wisest course is to reduce that possibility by applying every safe driving technique at his command," the commissioner said.

Hi-Shear Corp. Develops New Explosive Cap

The Hi-Shear Corp. has completed development and is now manufacturing a family of explosive cartridges. These standard units provide power to actuate mechanisms such as separation systems, thrust reversal and termination systems, electrical disconnects, parachute and data package ejection systems and other cartridge actuated devices.

This development now gives the company a full ordnance capability in the design of complete mechanical-ordnance systems for airborne and space use, i.e., power for the actuation of mechanisms and the associated precision mechanical systems.

Hi-Shear power cartridges have been developed with design parameters which meet all pertinent military specifications and are environmentally qualified. A typical cartridge weighs 14 grams, produces 10,000 psi gas pressure in less than 5 milliseconds, functions with .998 per cent reliability at temperatures of -320°F. through +500°F., withstands 100 "g" shock loads and will operate in the space environment.
