BEAUTY and the BEAST

Don't Bray! Do You Think He's a Mule?

by Count Mareo

That beast of burden, the jackass, gets much work accomplished. He is stalwart, strong and, more often than not, totally reliable.

Your very own beast is quite often similar. Yet both are frequently considered stubborn. Neither can be forced to do something.

No matter how loud you beat them with words, very little is accomplished in the end. With a man, it's even worse. Call him bullheaded and he is.

A simple little decision like which car to take into town, his or yours, can start an avalanche of trouble from which there may be no recovery. Patience with your man brings you great rewards.

Understand that as a woman you think much faster than he. You know exactly what move is to be made in most instances, and through experience and instinct you know yours is the right one.

But don't, like the typical American women I overhear, with a loud nasal voice attempt to shove a decision into his brain and down his throat. This gets you nowhere except to the divorce courts. Decision-making is his job. He doesn't want any help from you. He thinks.

Actually, once a man marries he loses his thinking powers. He begins to lean on you, to need your instinctively correct answers.

Subconsciously he knows you are usually right. This is why most successful men are married and why most married men are successful.

If you want something to be done, suggest it to him. Then hesitate. Be feminine about it all. Change your mind a few times. Let him love you because of your apparent helplessness to make decisions.

His masculinity is honored and besides you've planted the seed you want germinated. Within minutes he'll come up with the decision you want. Now isn't that easy?

Much easier than trying to force him, because once you do he may just react like a mule and you could get your teeth kicked in.
