

State's Political Future Forecast by Professor

California seems destined to become the national axis of the two major political parties, Dr. Totton J. Anderson, professor of political science at the University of Southern California, says in new book, "Western Politics," of which he is one of 15 co-authors.

The anticipated addition of eight electoral votes due to the 1960 census will make California's total of 40 a prize in the presidential race second only to New York's estimated 42, the USC professor says in a chapter on "California: Enigma of National Politics."

POLITICAL LEADERS look forward with confidence that California will assume first place after 1970, Dr. Anderson says.

"The national leadership of both parties has shown keen interest in the rocketing importance of the Golden State on the political horizon. It undoubtedly faces a brilliant political destiny in the future of the nation."

The new book on the significance of western politics on the contemporary American scene was edited by Dr. Frank H. Jonas of the University of Utah with chapters on the 13 western states contributed by leading political scientists in each state.

PARAPHRASING a remark by Winston Churchill concerning the nature of the Soviet Union, Dr. Anderson says that "California politics is an enigma inside a riddle, wrapped up in a mystery."

Perhaps its western heritage of rugged individualism explains why California developed as it has politically, the USC professor suggests.

"The inherent vitality of California politics is exemplified in a wide range of political experimentation, from the sophisticated practice of cross-filing to the frenetic espousal of 'loony' panaceas for redistribution of the wealth," he says.

"WHERE ELSE in the United States has there been such a heavy traffic in voters crossing party lines at election time under the banner of nonpartisanship? Not the least of these political vagaries has been the formation of a fluid coalition between conservatives in both major parties to protect the economic status quo, come what may!

"In attempting to follow the vacillating and opportunistic political leadership in this state, where candidates are exceedingly reluctant to admit publicly their party affiliation, the voter has developed a certain ambivalence toward his party loyalties. His consequent behavior sometimes borders upon a rather bizarre political neutralism and provides some of the distinguishing hallmarks of the California mores."

IN HIS chapter, the USC political scientist discusses California's geography, resources, and economy, population, the press, cross-filing, party organization and leaders, personalities, the legislature, interest groups and lobbying, reapportionment, initiative and referendum, the budget, and voting behavior.

Dr. Anderson is a former president of the Western Political Science Assn. and a former chairman of the USC political science department. He is a graduate of the University of California, Berkeley, and USC. He was registrar and dean of Ventura College before joining the USC faculty in 1947.

He is a colonel in the U.S. Air Force Reserve, having served with the 8th Air Force in Europe during World War II.

He was national associate director of The Citizenship Clearing House in New York in 1954-55. This is a nationwide organization to make available "better minds for better politics."

"Assist those in peril or distress and, if necessary, lay down my life rather than swerve from the path of duty," that's the motto of the California Highway Patrol.
