'King and I' Due On El Camino Stage

Banned in Bangkok as insulting to royal ancestors, but widely accepted in Boston and other parts of the world, "The King and I," Rodgers and Hammerstein musical comedy, will be the spring production at El Camino College.

Presentations of the play will be made in seven 8:30 p.m. performances on May 3, 4, 5, 9, 10, 11 and 12. Two special matinee performances at 2:30 p.m. will be held on May 5 and 12.

"Tickets ordered before one week prior to the date of performance will be returned to the customer by mail if a self-addressed stamped envelope is enclosed," Hamilton M. Madaford, assistant director of student personnel, said. Evening prices are $1.50, children's matinee 50 cents. An early sellout for all performances is expected.

THE MUSICAL comedy is based on the best seller "Anna and the King of Siam" by Margaret Landon. During the 1860's a prim, plain and proper school teacher arrives in the court of the King of Siam. She applies democratic teachings both to her royal princes, princesses and to the reluctant King. In time, Anna Leonowens and her tempestuous Oriental employer learn to respect one another's ways.

Wherever the "King and I" has been produced audiences are enthusiastic over the tuneless music and lyrics, the ballet number, and the rich splendor of the sets. Richard Rodgers wrote the music, Oscar Hammerstein II, the lyrics.

THE CAST and crew at the Campus Theater takes the audience on a musical safari into the rich splendors of the Far East. There is a romantic blend of comedy, romance, pathos and social meaning.

Due to the real Anna Leonowens' influence, the King of Siam abolished slavery and effected many social reforms.

THE PLAY is under the combined direction of Dr. Robert Haag, music instructor; Burnett Ferguson, drama; June Tsukida, choreographer, and Les Thomas, technical director.

The King is portrayed by Ed Long and Anna, by Joanne Horn. Lady Thiang is played by Marilyn Nitz, Tuption, Diane Barron; Lun Tha, John Alegria; the Kralahome, Sid Ellison; Sir Edward, Jack King; Louis, Mike McCarty, and the Crown Prince, Edward Kim.

Others in the cast are wives, dancers and children in colorful, glamorous costumes.

Law in Action

Recently a door-to-door salesman tried to leave a catalog at a home. The owner's barking dog chased him for fifty feet along the inside fence, barking the while. When he opened the gate, the dog bit him.

The salesman sued. A California law makes owners liable to a person if bitten by the dog: (1) while in a public place, or (2) when lawfully on private property.

When is a salesman lawfully on private property? When he has reason to think he is welcome and can do business with the owner.

Yet in this salesman's case the court freed the dog owner of blame. The salesman "had assumed the risk" of being bitten. A dog which barks along a fifty foot fence should have warned the salesman of his danger, a danger he assumed when he opened the gate.

One may also assume a "limited" risk. To be sure, a man who knowingly tried to ride an unbroken mule would assume the full risk of being thrown. But a woman who was thrown from a mule which was continually hired out for Grand Canyon packtrips assumed only the risks of the trip on a gentle, well-broken mule. She could recover damages.

You assume the risk and get no recovery for injuries if you knew or should have known of your risk.

What if people tell you in so many words that you "assume the risk" or "take your own chances?" Those warnings control unless the people have an unfair bargaining power, or are breaking a safety law.

For example, a sign in one public swimming pool said "Bathers use the pool at their own risk." Here the sign was not controlling since state law called for a life-guard no matter what the sign said.

Above all, be extra careful with children. Under the law the risks they assume are not like those of adults. At certain ages they assume no risks. For they do not size up dangers as adults do. They lack judgment, and others must look out for them.
