YOUR PROBLEMS

by Ann Landers

'Be Proud—Live Up To Obligations ...'

Dear Ann Landers: What in the world do you do with a mother like mine? My religion is Seventh Day Adventist. Saturday is our holy day. My mother doesn't want me to accept any dates on Friday night because after sundown it is considered Sabbath. When a fellow asks me for a Friday night date I feel like a fool. Rather than tell him the truth I just say I am busy. Some of the boys who don't understand our religion would think I was nutty.

In America Sunday is the Sabbath for most people and I never heard of a girl not being able to go out on Saturday night because she has to be in by sundown. My mother has respect for your advice. Please tell her to shape up, will you? Thanks a lot.—VICTIM OF RELIGIOUS PERSECUTION.

Dear Victim: Sorry, Petunia, you're the one who'd better shape up. Be proud of your religious convictions and live up to the obligations. If a fellow would turn thumbs down on you because you were adhering to your religious principles then he isn't worth bothering about.

And by the way, why don't you stick to fellows who are Seventh Day Adventists? This would solve the problem.

Dear Ann Landers: I am 12 years old and I like a red-headed boy who sits in back of me in school. His last name begins with the same initial that mine does and he has been sitting behind me ever since kindergarten.

The problem is he always wants me to sit over to the side of my seat during tests so he can copy off my paper. I have done it a few times and feel just awful because I know it isn't exactly honest. I get very good grades. When I sit over to the side his grades are very good, too.

He says he is very fond of me and when his mother lets him date he's going to ask me out. Do you think it would be selfish of me if I told him to study for the exams the same as I do? —ALICE

Dear Alice: When you let someone copy off your paper you are helping him cheat. This means you are cheating, too.

You don't really do a person a favor when you hand him things he should be earning. You encourage him to get by on somebody else's efforts and this isn't the way
