

YOUR PROBLEMS

'Stay Home Where You Belong . . .'

Dear Ann Landers: A great deal has been written in favor of "Togetherness." Now I'd like to say something in support of "Apartness."

After 18 years of "Togetherness" my husband announced he has found someone who understands him better and is more fun. He wants a few months of "Apartness" in which to think things over.

My big mistake was going to work in my husband's business. It was a temporary measure until he could hire permanent help—I told myself. But your own business has qualities like quicksand. You never get out—only in, deeper and deeper.

My husband and I were together 24 hours a day. I knew what he was going to say before he opened his mouth. He must have been equally bored with me. After 10 hours in business I'd put in another four hours doing housework. He'd relax. Then the complaints began. I "wasn't fun anymore."

Now that we have no financial worries and money in the bank, I'm a worn-out nag and he needs a filly. Let this be a warning to you girls who are tempted to try the double-harness bit. Stay home where you belong. If your husband needs help, let him hire someone. It will be cheaper in the long run.—READY FOR THE GLUE FACTORY

Dear Ready: Fine reward for 18 years of loyal service. Maybe your husband needs a saliva test.

Dear Ann Landers: Several members of our family live out of town. What I want to know is this: When a visitor arrives from another city is she supposed to call up the people she wishes to see and say, "Hello, I am here." Or are her friends and relatives supposed to call her and say "Welcome" when they learn she has arrived?

We are an informal group and there has been no trouble among relatives so long as I can remember. But now a certain party has married into the family and this problem has come up. She has been in town for three days and has not called anyone. We would like to entertain her, but if I'm not mistaken she is supposed to call those of us she wishes to see. Am I right or wrong?—LAURA
