Ann Landers

could have been written by my own daughter.

The divorce laws in most states are archaic. In Canada they are impossible.

It is almost universal that the mother gets custody of the children. Only in cases where the father is willing to testify that his wife is an unfit mother (an out-and-out tramp) does he stand a chance of getting the children.

I didn't want a divorce. It was my wife's idea. She found marriage too confining. She wanted to live it up—which she certainly did as I later found out. I had enough evidence to hang her but I didn't want to drag her name through the mud because of our children and her aging parents. So I remained silent. She took the children.

Every Sunday when the children are with me we have a wonderful time. When it's time to take them back to their mother I practically have to drag them out of the car. Often there are tears. But the court insists they are better off with her.

You are right, Ann, the children are the big losers in a divorce. For the second biggest losers I'd like to nominate the fathers—B.B.

Dear B.B.: The amazing thing about the divorce game is that so many people are losers yet it becomes increasingly popular.

to science fiction and children's fables are welcome. "It's an opportunity for anyone who enjoys reading to obtain a whole new library," Mrs. Pearson said.
