YOUR PROBLEMS
by Ann Landers

'Mistake Already Made, Deal Firmly'

Dear Ann Landers: Two years ago we met a couple who seemed lively and interesting. I will call them the Joneses. My husband took to them immediately — especially to Mrs. Jones. To complicate matters, Mr. Jones couldn't keep his hands off me. He was always pulling me on his lap which my husband thought was "perfectly all right."

After awhile it was apparent that my husband wanted to be with this couple six nights a week. He would dance with Mrs. Jones for hours while I was busy fighting off Mr. Jones. I began to find Mr. Jones repulsive, and as for Mrs. Jones, I hated the sight of her.

Two months ago my mother became ill and I had to go to Arizona to arrange for surgery and nursing care. I was gone three weeks. My husband virtually moved in with the Joneses. I became furious when he phoned me from their home one night, half crooked, and told me what a great time he was having and not to hurry home.

I'm home now and we still see the Joneses six nights a week. What can I do about this mess? — QUADRANGLE STRANGLED

Dear Quad: Your letter is one I see every day—only the names are different.

You should have lowered the boom earlier, but no one can live his life in reverse. The mistake has been made and now you must deal with it firmly.

Inform your husband that you are fed up with the Joneses and that you will no longer be a party to this switchman's picnic.

If he can't live without their company tell him he is free to spend ALL his time with them. But make it plain that Mrs. Jones will have to iron his shirts and mend his socks. And he should be prepared to send your monthly support checks in the mail.

Dear Ann Landers: I'm still burning over the letter from J. B. whose wife is going to pieces because her 18-year-old son enlisted in the service.

Believe me, I wish to heaven my husband had got his. (Continued on Page 14)
