YOUR PROBLEMS

'You Are Creating Resentment . . .'

Dear Ann Landers: We have four children—two boys and two girls. The boys (18 and 17) have never caused us any trouble. They go with the same group of teenagers and get along well together. The girls are 16 and 15. They got along fairly well (though not as well as the boys) until about two years ago. Ginger who is 16 is full of fun and has a great many friends. Debbie does better in school but is somewhat unsuccessful socially. It is ironic that Debbie is much better looking than her older sister but not nearly so popular with either boys or girls.

Ginger has always received a great many more invitations than Debbie. I've insisted that she arrange to have Debbie invited or she must stay home, also. Lately she has become rebellious over this.

I say sisterly love is more important than any invitation and that Ginger should not go where Debbie is not invited. We want your opinion.

—REFEREE
Dear Referee: This is no way to encourage sisterly love, mother. You are creating resentment between these sisters which may well last forever.

Insist that Debbie make her own friends. Ginger should not be placed in the unattractive position of begging for an invitation for her sister. You are not being fair to either of these girls.

Dear Ann Landers: I see by your newspaper that you firmly believe prolonged mourning is unhealthy. You say it serves no useful purpose and long-time mourning is really "self-pity turned inside out."

You usually make pretty good sense. I agree in this case that you are right. Now, I would like to know your views on prolonged courtship. What do you think about couples who go together for years and somehow never seem to get around to marriage?

I know of a couple who have been dating for 15 years. Is this unhealthy? My initials are the same as yours.—A. L.

Dear A. L.: It all depends on the couple. I've said it before and I'll say it again—marriage is not for everyone. Some couples "go together" like salami and rye bread—but they are unable (for a variety of reasons) to function within the framework of marriage. For them—marriage is a disaster—and they are better off "going together."

Dear Ann Landers: I married too young like a big fool (Continued on Page 38)
