YOUR PROBLEMS

by Ann Landers

"Stop Wearing Stuff, You've Lost Nothing"

Dear Ann Landers: A referee is needed. Will you serve? I have been told for as long as I can remember that I have very beautiful hands. My nails are long and the type that do not break. It so happens that I especially like platinum frosted nail polish. I keep my nails perfectly manicured and people are always commenting on them.

The other evening, much to my surprise, the man I've been going with for several months said, "Why don't you stop wearing that hideous nail polish? Your nails look like an eagle's talons."

I was dumbfounded but made a quick recovery and told him I would choose the kind of nail polish I liked—and for the time being I like this.

Do you feel perhaps I should do as he suggests just to please him? Or should I refuse to be pushed around? —TARSUS

Dear Tarsus: I don't see any evidence that he is trying to push you around. The man simply let you know he does not like your nail polish.

I say stop using the platinum frosted stuff. If your nails and hands are as lovely as you say, ANY shade of polish will look well. The man will be flattered and you will have lost nothing.

(P.S. I agree with him. I don't like that platinum stuff, either.)

Dear Ann Landers: We moved into our new home only a few days ago. It is a charming place, just what we've been looking for—but I think we may have trouble with the woman next door. I'm writing to ask how to handle the problem before it starts.

When our van of furniture pulled up this neighbor hauled a lawn chair over to the edge of her property—as close to ours as she could get. She sat there the whole time the van was unloading, examining every piece of furniture as it was carried into our home.

I'm worried about a woman who has so much free time that she can spend an afternoon that way. I've never had
