Mike's Thursday Mailbag
 Dear Mike: A friend of mine just returned from Las Vegas where he played blackjack with Dean Martin. He swears Dean is only five-feet-eight-inches tall. Is this true? — Mary M. Fisher, Philadelphia, Pa.

Dear Mr. Connolly: Is it true Susan Hayward owns her own private lake in Georgia? — Gladys Dowd, Rockfall, Conn.

Dear Mary: Dean informs me he always sits down when he plays blackjack, so how could your friend tell? Seriously, however, Dean's a six-footer and I know this to be true because I'm one, too, and every time I talk to him he looks me straight in the eye.

Dear Gladys: True. But it isn't big enough for Susan and her husband, Eaton Chalkley. They just bought a yacht for cruising the Gulf Stream.

Dear Mr. Connolly: Can you give me some information about James Shigeta, the leading man in the movie, "Flower Drum Song"? He is not only a handsome young man but also a very talented one. Has he done anything since? — Florence Ross, Sea Isle City, N.J.

Dear Sir: Why are they hiring an English director, Tony Richardson, for that movie about an American cemetery, "The Loved One"? — Jean McGraw, St. Augustine, Fla.

Dear Florence: James is a Hawaiian-born Nisei. He started in show business as a Guy Brion in a nightclub act called Brion and Davis. Tallulah Bankhead caught the act and touted him to producer Ross Hunter for that movie. He has also filmed "Bride to the Sun." And he is now starring in the stage version of "Flower Drum Song" at the Melodyland Theater in Anaheim.

Dear Jean: Because an Englishman, Evelyn Waugh, wrote it in a fit of pique when Metro failed to film another novel of his, "Bridghead Revisited," after buying it. On top of that, they've signed Jessica Mitford, author of "The American Way of Death," to write the screenplay.

Dear Mike: Why all the mystery about Max von Sydow, who plays the part of Christ in George Stevens' new movie, "The Greatest Story Ever Told"? I should think any publicity about the picture would help it. Why the cover-up? — Billie King, Colorado City, Tex.

Dear Elaine: Once you see her in her first movie, you'll get the message. She's all girl. As a child, she couldn't pronounce her real name, Deyenie. It came out something like Joey.

Dear Billie: Stevens believes it's best to keep Max "a man of mystery." Before signing the Swedish actor, Stevens made him sign a contract that he wouldn't make another movie until this one is released in July, 1964. But Max may beat the rap by starring in a Broadway play.

Dear Mr. C.: We love Abby Dalton on the Joey Bishop Bishop show, he's so natural. Is she married to someone in show business? — Mrs. Walter J. Lundry, Shokie, Ill.

Dear Mrs. Lundry: Abby is the wife of Jack Smith, a Burbank businessman (electrical supplies). Their infant son, Matthew David, is also a regular on the show.

Dear Mike: I just saw a very handsome, very talented Robert Redford in "Barefoot in the Park" on Broadway. Has anybody grabbed him for a movie yet? They'd better — he's going to be a big star! — Elizabeth Cutshaw, Woodmere, N.Y.

Dear Elizabeth: You betcha. Carson Kanin has him, after he plays six months in "Barefoot," for a starring role in "Roses Are Blue."
