

YOUR PROBLEMS

by Ann Landers

'Why Are You Incensed? ...'

Dear Ann Landers: The whole town is talking about this and most people are as incensed as I am. The approaching marriage of a young woman was announced recently in a newspaper. The girl flunked out of the University of Michigan and the following year returned home after attending Michigan State for a few months. Then she went east and got a job working in a department store. The newspaper announcement described her as a graduate of Radcliffe.

The girl's fiance is a young man from New York. According to the newspaper announcement he is a graduate of Yale. He says, "Pleased to meetcha," and "I'd radder have deez den doze." My husband is a Yale graduate and he is furious.

Why don't newspapers check the facts? Do they print anything handed to them and assume it is correct? I'd like your comments and so would others in this town.—DONDE VERDAD

Dear Donde: Some newspapers verify such facts but most newspapers assume that people are not going to lie about their education.

It's disappointing when people are dishonest but why are you "incensed?" You've lost nothing and they've gained nothing. This incident has made the family look ridiculous.

Dear Ann Landers: I was interested in the letter from the mother of a young dentist. He had just begun to practice and several of his relatives went to him for dental care. When he sent them bills for his services they refused to pay. They said they were "helping him get experience" and that he should appreciate their willingness to take a chance on him.

You told the mother that a dental fee should be discussed with the patient before the work is done—relative or not.

What about physicians? Both my husband and I have had surgery recently. When the bills arrived we were shocked. We have friends who had similar operations and their bills were much smaller. I've always felt it was beneath the dignity of a physician.
