

Saturday's Armed Forces Day Parade

NATION'S PROTECTOR . . . Clawing its way down the two-mile Armed Forces Day parade route in Torrance yesterday, a tank from the Inglewood National Guard unit puts its wares on display for a sidewalk full of spectators. The 80-unit parade, stretching two miles in length, capped a weekend full of activities in the fourth annual Armed Forces Day observance. Weekend activities included a fireworks display, jet fighter demonstrations, and a parachute jump.

TODAY'S ACK-ACK . . . Gone are the cumbersome, short-range anti-aircraft batteries of yesterday and in their place is the Nike Missile, a supersonic guided missile that seeks out and destroys enemy aircraft miles before they reach the target area. Major cities of the nation are ringed with batteries of Nike missiles such as the ones in place at the east end of Torrance Municipal Airport.

FANCY STEPPERS . . . Precision drilling delighted crowds gathered along the parade route yesterday. Above, a sharply-drilled reserve unit prepares to go through an intricate drill maneuver for onlookers along Cabrillo Avenue. Reserve units, as well as active soldiers, played an important part in the annual parade.
