Accounting Courses at Harbor Set

Enrollment in a wide variety of accounting courses at Harbor College's evening division is still open for the spring semester, reports Robert Wrenn, chairman of the business division. Instruction in the courses will begin Feb. 3, 1964. Most of the introductory classes will be offered from 6:30 to 9:30 p.m. Monday and Wednesday or Tuesday and Thursday. Classes are offered in introductory and intermediate accounting. Two introductory classes are planned. Other courses include cost accounting, tax accounting, and related courses. Instructors are certified public accountants and are practicing currently in business and industry. Applications for admission to the evening division must be submitted to the Admissions Office no later than Jan. 24, 1964. Complete course catalogues are available at the college. You can learn more by letting the other fellow tell you all he knows than you can learn by telling him all you know.

Bureau Requests Volunteer Aid

The Harbor-South Bay Volunteer Bureau, which assists unfortunate persons in the community, has a variety of jobs available for volunteers. Further information may be obtained at the Volunteer Bureau, 833-5227, Monday, Wednesday and Friday mornings.

A Closer Look

By Ernest Kreiling

HOLLYWOOD — "John Fitzgerald Kennedy loved American politics. The story you are about to see tells of one of its greatest clashes. This film was finished shortly before his death. We have left it as it was then, believing that the noble profession of politics and the men who aspired to lead us are greater in candid recollection."

In a Chicago television studio just minutes before the start of the first television debate, candidates Nixon and Kennedy met and talked as photographers' flash bulbs flared.

Nixon: Did you have a good turn out in Cleveland?
 Kennedy: Yes, very good.
 Nixon: I suppose it was windy there...
 Kennedy: You leaving tonight?
 Nixon: No, I'm staying over till morning.

These are the opening words of what will probably be the most talked about, most memorable, and most worthy of this year's television programs. "The Making of the President, 1960," a 90-minute film version of Theodore H. White's best selling book of the same name, will be aired over the ABC television network Sunday evening (8:30 PST), Dec. 29.

"THIS IS A story of power," and a story of men whose lives were "reshaped by presidential ambition," and who entered "that rowdy transaction of passion, tumult and circus called a presidential campaign."

John F. Kennedy is of necessity the focal point of the film by right of the fact that he won the contest that White, in book form, and David L. Wolper, in film form, have chronicled. By any standard it is a film to merit enormous attention and serious evaluation, but there's no escaping the fact that those tragic November days have endowed the film with such potent emotional values that objective assessment of its documentary merits is impossible.

It evokes many forgotten memories. It underscores the fun, the frolic, the hysteria, the distortion, the implausibility, the impracticality, and the lumbering awkwardness of an almost outrageous system of presidential selection that works. It brings into sharp focus the fact that American political campaigns are directed to the heart, not the mind. It reminds us again that each voter "is an individual American with an individual past,"... and that "both candidates must try to reach the individual in the mass and turn him from the past to face the future."

And on the day after the election President - Designate Kennedy spoke to the nation from the Hyannis Port Armory, then "he slowly leaves the veteran reporters who have followed him for thousands of miles. He accepts congratulations, offers greetings to those suddenly shy. But they and he know it is farewell. As President he must walk alone."

As the Inauguration ceremony ends, President Eisenhower shakes the new President's hand: "And now there is the distance round him, the majesty that must surround the chief. It has started somewhere with a handshake in the street, in the snows of the past. It ends on a handshake in the snow — so power passes."

THERE IS of course a complete second story about "The Making of A President, 1960" that must go mostly untold. It's the story of Producer-Director Mel Stuart and the one million feet of film that he searched, the fifty hours of film he viewed, the precious bits of film and tape retrieved from oblivion that show personal insights and intimate behind the scenes glimpses of the candidates that go into this 90 minute experience.

"The Making of the President, 1960," is a compelling look into the great miracle of American democracy.

Saxons Help Children to Enjoy Season

AT THE SAME TIME the American voter "prepares to measure two men for leadership."

The mellifluous tone of Martin Gabel's voice brings to life the eloquence of Theodore White's prose throughout the presentation.

Of the Wisconsin primary: "... Kennedy, the elegant stranger from Boston... one as a stick on the steeple corners of chill Wisconsin... reaches for hands to shake, hearts to win... and for votes." The film shows an almost solitary Senator Kennedy reaching for the hands of the occasional passersby, preoccupied people who scarcely glance at him, people whose faces are impassive, disinterested, or quizzical when they do bother to take notice of him.

AT A CAUCUS of several state delegations at the Democratic convention in Los Angeles: Lyndon B. Johnson delivers a pointed attack on Senator Kennedy looks on. Kennedy replies, "He made some general references to, ah... shortcomings of other Presidential candidates but as he was talking about some other candidates and not about me... I was not present on all those occasions... no one... ah... I was not majority leader, I... as Lyndon knows, I never criticize, in fact, on every occasion I said that I thought Senator Johnson should not enter the primaries. That his proper responsibilities were as majority leader and that if he would let Hubert, Wayne, and I settle this matter

Christmas projects of North High School students brought some extra joy to hospitalized children and added a note of happiness for other groups.

Members of the Future Business Leaders of America carried 35 hand-made puppets to children at the Hawthorne Community Hospital, while members of the Future Homemakers of America sent stuffed animals to the same hospital.

At Harbor General Hospital, the Girls' Athletic Assn. and the Inter-Club Council delivered toys which they had collected in a campus drive.

The Clown Club presented performances for the Dianas Club, the children of the Los Angeles Police Department, and the Manhattan Beach Fire Department. Many groups joined last Monday to go caroling.

Montana Vets Receive Bonus

World War I veterans who were residents of the state of Montana at the time of entry into the service are eligible for a military bonus as a result of an act passed by the Montana legislature.

The World War I bonus is payable to either the veteran or to his survivor, according to County Service Officer Arthur H. Tryon.

Application forms may be obtained by writing to: Adjusted Compensation Division, P. O. Box 1190, Helena, Montana.
