COOL HOMES
Researchers at the University of California College of Agriculture are studying ways to have cooler homes in warm areas. Frederick A. Brooks, professor of agricultural engineering, is designing homes more comfortably suited to the warmer areas.

COOL HOT CLIMATES
Plants are nature's way of providing air conditioning in hot climates, according to Robert Deering, assistant professor of landscape gardening on the Davis campus, University of California. Plants absorb hot sunrays and give off moisture which cools surrounding air by evaporation.
