Torrance Armory Here Soon Drive Starts To Recruit Men

JUST SIGN ON THE DOTTED LINE... One of the first to sign up with the National Guard during its present drive is Jim Haberbusch. Torrance will soon have its own armory and an all-out drive is under way to bring the local unit up to strength. Seen are Sergeants First Class William R. Lyons (left) and Gordon T. Russell both of Torrance.

Torrance will soon have a National Guard armory of its own. Stationed at the new armory will be the Bridge Company of the 132nd Combat Engineer Battalion of California's own 40th Armored Division.

Bridge Company, currently stationed at the Manhattan Beach armory, is already primarily composed of men from Torrance and vicinity. Many of the men in the company have had no prior military experience.

Others come from such various backgrounds as for example Sfc. William R. Lyons, 101st Airborne Division, World War II; Sfc. Gordon T. Russell, 1st Marine Division, World War II and Korea; M/Sgt. John Garcia, 77th Inf. Division, World War II; M/Sgt. Ben Owens, 578th Combat Engineers, Korea, and many others.

Training Program

The unit meets one night a week for two hours and takes up such diversified training as: fundamentals of engineering layout and construction of bridges and roads, operation of engineer heavy equipment such as bulldozers, roadgraders, cranes; minefields and demolitions, and basic knowledge of the soldier and many individual special skills.

The highlight of the military year is the two weeks' summer camp where the year's training is put to test. Many advanced stages of training are taken up: weapons firing, military tactics and specialist training among others.

The National Guard provides the opportunity to train at home while fulfilling the draft requirements, it was stated.

Until the Torrance armory is constructed, interested individuals are invited to visit the Manhattan Beach Armory, 532 36th street, Manhattan Beach, where further information is available. This unit meets Tuesday evenings at 7:30 p.m. Call FRontier 2-6611 for additional information.

Bond Issues Endorsed By Local Groups

Service clubs, civic groups, and other organizations have gone on record supporting the two bond issues which will be placed before Torrance voters this coming Tuesday, October 19.

The swimming pool and new civic center have been endorsed by the Oil Workers International Union and the United Steel Workers of America, both locally and nationally.

The Torrance Industries Tax committee has also come out in support of the civic center (city hall and police station).

A resolution favoring both bond issues was passed by the City Council of Torrance.

The Business and Professional Woman's club went on record as favoring both the swimming pool and civic center bond issues.

"Cost of the two vitally needed bond issues will be only $1.75 for the first year and less thereafter for the average homeowner," according to City Manager George Stevens.
