As local as the corner drugstore...

At first glance there doesn't seem to be much similarity between the oil business in Torrance and the corner drugstore or butcher shop. Actually, though, they are very much alike in many ways

For one thing, all three of these businesses are local. They employ local people to serve the everyday needs of local people. When an issue of importance arises in the community, it affects the family of the druggist, the butcher — and the man in the oil business.

Let's look at what we call the local oil industry. Here in Torrance, for example, our Torrance Mobilgas Refinery and seven independently operated Mobilgas stations provide employment for 1,129 residents of Torrance and adjacent communities.

Like you, these oil people work here, participate in community affairs, pay their taxes here, buy the food and clothing for their families at locally-owned stores with the money they earn here. In short, this is their community, and they, like the other folks who live here, want it to grow and to prosper because that will mean more of the good things of life for them and their families.

Yes the oil business is a local business and, as such, is proud to take its place in this community with the other local businesses in serving the needs of its citizens.
