School days bring study days and, chances are, Johnny's room is not conducive to productive study. It seems that most children's rooms not only are littered with toys, heaps of clothing and assorted junk, but are otherwise not suited for study concentration.

A child's room should be bright and cheerful, yet not distracting. Figured wallpaper, or Cowboy and Indian murals will take Johnny's imagination away from textbooks.

In addition to the psychological effects of a well-planned color scheme in a child's room.
