Health Officer Lashes out at Polio Vaccine Apathy

Roy O. Gilbert, M.D., L. A. County Health Officer

With the discovery of an effective vaccine for the prevention of poliomyelitis, health and medical officials soon had as their goal the vaccination of all persons under 40 years of age. Apparently, there is considerable apathy on the part of the public to avail themselves of this health measure, however, and this now preventable disease is still very much in the news.

The State Health Department reports that 77 per cent of the polio cases that have occurred in California this year have been paralytic in nature and two-thirds of these cases have occurred among the unvaccinated. Although in Los Angeles County to date the actual number of polio cases is less than last year, 107 as compared to 369 in 1957, the number of paralytic cases is proportionately very much greater. The paralytic form of polio has struck hardest, according to health officials, among the preschool children and young adults who have not had the series of three inoculations of the Salk vaccine.

Nationally, attack rates this year were highest in one-year-olds, with more than 50 per cent of all paralytic cases occurring in children under five. Figures show that these cases most often occurred either in poorly vaccinated or in lower income groups. However, enough cases occurred outside these groups to warrant vaccination for all persons up to at least 40 years of age.

The vaccine apparently confers immunity as fast as the disease for a considerable period of time. Medical studies also show that it continues to be effective among persons who were vaccinated more than three years ago.

Considering the availability of the vaccine it seems very heedless indeed to leave children unprotected against the disease, and they should certainly be protected by vaccination.

Polio vaccination is offered in many community clinics underwritten by the National Founda-
