Domino Game
 "They're joined like dominos," explains R. W. Beall, Jr., secretary of the company. He added that the firm has already installed the slips at several marinas in Southern California and hopes to boost its daily production from 10 to 40 or 50 later this year.
 Advantages of concrete floats over those of other materials is that they last indefinitely without any maintenance or repair problems. Also they can be obtained in assorted colors, and they maintain the temperature of the water, it was explained.
 He foresees a tremendous future in the business because of the boom in pleasure boating.

While Kenny Olson, 7, his father, Kenneth E. Olson, the owner of a local glass firm, and Reynold Wright, a family friend, were riding in an 18-foot cruiser off Redondo Beach, a wave overturned the craft. The father and Wright were spilled into the ocean and were aided to safety by lifeguards. Kenny meanwhile was still inside the cabin of the capsized craft. When the boat washed ashore, the lifeguards unlocked the cabin and pulled Kenny out alive.

Back to Boats
 "Boats used to be quite the thing, years ago. Then cars took over. But now there are so many cars on the roads that nobody wants to go out for a Sunday drive anymore, and boats are back in public favor," Beall said.
 Eventually, the firm's officials predict, a marina will be every 25 miles along the Southern California coastline.
 And the Torrance firm intends to be right up there when time for bidding on slip installation arrives.

Outstanding Students
