Speaker Discounts Russian Technological Achievements

An awesome but realistic picture of Communist Russia as a menace to civilization was etched in the minds of an audience at the Rolling Hills Toastmaster Club dinner last week in the Fish Shanty Restaurant in Waveria.

The speaker was Bart Ewell, a technological engineer of the Shell Oil Company, who resides with his wife, Wilhemina and their three children at 1541 Palos Verdes Drive, West.

"Many people think," said Ewell, "that because the Soviet government was able to launch a 'spoutnik,' Russia has become far advanced in technology, even farther, perhaps, than the United States, on which Russia depended so much during World War

II to win her defense against Germany.

No Individual Rights
"Nothing could be further from the truth," he continued. "The whole Communist world is handicapped by its very way of life, which removes from the laboring masses the great incentives of a higher standard of civilized living as we know it in our country. In Russia, the common man does what he is told and has no chance to use his initiative toward the advancement of his career and his own interests. This is a far greater weakness than many people throughout the world realize.

"The contrast can be seen in our own country, where a man can start with nothing and rise to unlimited heights of wealth and fame. In our country a man is free to enjoy life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, but in Communist Russia, the ordinary mortal has no rights except those granted by a Stalin or a Khrushchev.

Russian People Are Pawns
"Whether the people of Russia will become more enlightened in the future and rebel at their condition remains to be seen," said Ewell, "but one thing is certain, they are the pawns of their unscrupulous masters in the Kremlin, and as such, can be used for the evil purposes of a form of slavery unequalled in the history of the world."

The successful launching of the 'spoutnik' by the Russians was more of a fortunate accident for them than a technological achievement," said Ewell. "Actually, the Russians have a long way to go to achieve the progress and the inventive genius which is so predominant in the United States. "The Communists are making a strong bid for world power, true, but they are doing it by stirring trouble wherever it can be stirred, and by keeping the rest of the world in fear of what they will do next.

May Catch Up in 15 Years
"In 10 or 15 years, if all goes well with the Communists, they may be able to match us in military power, and then, of course, they will be a menace not only to us but to the entire world. They are now exerting all their national effort, with the constant prodding of their government, to produce weapons of war. Unlike us, however, they are doing it at the expense of the welfare of their people, for the living standards in Russia today are little better than they were 10 or 20 years ago."
