TORRANCE BOY, 9-year-old Bobby Butler, makes weekly trip to Babies' and Children's Hospital for injection of serum by Dr. Alfred Roos. Roos has taught allergy classes for 30 years.

Allergy Victims Given Aid from Chest Money

Allergy victims may take hope from findings by one of many clinics operated, with the help of Community Chest funds, by California Babies and Children's Hospital, Los Angeles. Few medical mysteries present a greater challenge. Final solution often involves exhaustive study of a patient's personality and environment. Manifestations include sniffles and sneezes, headaches, asthma, itching, and rashes.

Attacks may result from plant pollens, feathers, dust, or intolerance for certain foods.

They can be triggered by emotional disturbance. Eight-year-old Danny was able to enter school this year for the first time, after a long period of study and treatment at the clinic headed by Dr. Alfred Roos.

Danny had a history of severe asthma, starting when he was a year old. When he was 2, a new baby brother claimed most of his mother's time and affection. Danny's attacks became so acute he had to be in a hospital once a week.

When his mother took him to the clinic in desperation, both her patience and money had been depleted.

Danny reacted slightly to the series of tests given by Dr. Roos, not enough to account for his attacks. Probing revealed Danny's feeling of rejection by his mother, a conviction borne out by her aversion to his condition.

Her attitude toward the boy and his problem remained unchanged.

But Danny responded to a marked degree. He learned to accept and understand his own condition. He knows now that any emotional upset will bring on a severe attack. He still goes to the clinic, more for encouragement than physical need.

Clinics at California Babies' and Children's Hospital serve the needs of 1500 children monthly, from infancy to 16 years of age, according to Mabelle Beckett, administrator. Its staff of 72 physicians and surgeons donate 100 hours a month and remain on call for emergencies.

In the allergy clinic, children receive 750 tests a month and 325 injections of serum, each tailored to the need of the individual patient by Dr. Roos and his assistant, Dr. Esther I. Sulmeyer.
