Navy Raises Mental Grades

The navy recruiting office at 114 Coral Way, Redondo, this week announced mental requirements for enlisting have been raised 18%. Boatswain's Mate First Class Thomas A. Coleman said "it is necessary that young men entering the navy today be of higher mental caliber to be trained to operate the complex machinery used in today's modern ships and aircraft. Men who cannot meet the requirements have little chance of learning to operate the equipment an everyday use in the fleet. "More proficient men can put their abilities to use for the navy, and, if they do not make the navy a career, they will be trained for better positions in civilian life."
