BURMESE HONEYSUCKLE

If a big, bold and showy vine is what the gardener wants, try a Giant Burmese Honeysuckle. Fast growing and lush, it will cover the wall of a house in one good season. The tubular (and fragrant) blooms are up to five or six inches long, and a nice contrast to the large, glossy leaves. Burmese Honeysuckle is a number one vine any way you look at it.

PROPERTY LINE

For instance, want to mark a property line and if so, how? A boundary between two drives must be formal and clipped of necessity, but a rear boundary can be informal and full. Or, perhaps, the gardener merely wants to hint at a boundary in which case a neat row of Dwarf Boxwood or Floribunda roses would draw the line very well.
