Outer Space Is Subject Of STL Guest's Lecture

Dr. Evelyn B. Collins, mathematical analyst at Space Technology Laboratories, Inc., delves into the subject of "Outer Space" during a guest appearance Friday (Jan. 5) on KCOP's "Guidepost to Science" series, 9:15 a.m., on Channel 13. In addition to public viewing, the program will also be seen by elementary students in the Los Angeles City School system, which sponsors the "Guidepost" series.

Along with producer-moderator Mrs. Reba Roebuck, Dr. Collins will discuss several U.S. satellites, methods of determining satellite orbits, the use of solar cells as a source of electrical energy, and other aspects of space technology.

UNDER CONTRACT

Among satellites to be seen on the program will be OGO, the Orbiting Geophysical Observatory, which STL is under contract to build for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

A member of the STL Advanced Dynamics Section, Dr. Collins currently works in the field of applied celestial mechanics, researching methods of computing orbits for spacecraft.

She received her M.A. and Ph.D. degrees in Mathematics and a B.A. degree in the same field from Smith College. Prior to joining STL, she was a member of the team of mathematicians and scientists who formulated the calculations and planned computer programs for tracking the Mercury man-in-space capsule.

She has also served as an associate professor in mathematics at Fisk University, Nashville, Tenn., and has performed mathematical research work in Washington, D.C., for both the Department of the Army and the National Bureau of Standards.

STL is a subsidiary of Thompson Ramo Wooldridge Inc.
