

An Open Letter to a Mother

found me and took me home to his mother. The nurses and doctors at Harbor General Hospital, where Arthur Murphy's mother took me, have given me a name. Jerry Doe. I like Jerry. Doe makes me feel a little bit anonymous. But I am, aren't I? When the nurses took me they cleaned me and changed my clothes. The diapers, white t-shirt, yellow booties, long-sleeved sweater and bunting bag you left me in were dirty. Did you know there would be insects in the field? I want to thank you for the nice note you left with me. It said, "please have someone adopt my baby with good understanding, also good care." I am sure glad someone found me in time so your wish will be granted. I heard the police say you didn't sign your name. They did say you are right handed but you wrote my note with your left hand. It was a good thing the boy happened to be taking a shortcut across the field at Abalone St. near Plaza Del Amo and Border Ave. It was a good thing he happened to look in my little box. I guess I was just born lucky. But, take it from an experienced eight-day-old, Mom, next time leave the baby, box and note on a door step or at a church . . . and ring the bell. He'd appreciate that.

History of Crisis

(Continued from Page One) than four years ago, when Dictator Batista fled to the Dominican Republic. Several months later, when sworn in as Prime Minister, Fidel Castro declared in a speech to the American Society of Newspaper Editors in Washington:

"We are not Communists." Shortly thereafter, however, in July of 1959, the United States Senate Internal Security Sub-Committee was told by the de-facto Cuban Air Force chief, Major Lanz, that Fidel Castro was a Communist.

HOSTILITY SHOWN

From that date forward, Castro's hostility towards the United States was evidenced in both words and deeds. Constant charges of planned invasions by the United States were made, accompanied by seizure of first, American refineries, and then all United States owned property. Independent newspapers were seized and trade agreements were entered into with the Soviet Union. After preliminary embargoes on all goods to Cuba except for food and medicines, the United States finally, on Jan. 3, 1961, severed relations with Cuba. In his inaugural address on Jan. 20, 1961, President Kennedy issued a strong warning to Russia not to interfere in the Western Hemisphere.

At the time of this inaugural address, the Castro dictatorship was still in its infancy and its physical power was barely noticeable. The Communist hold on Cuba had not been consolidated and its people still had it within their power to overthrow the new regime if given effective leadership from within and encouragement from without.

'MERE PUPPET'
Today, a scant 19 months later, Castro stands revealed as a mere puppet for soviet control. The power of Soviet Cuba stands at a point second only to our own in this hemisphere and ranks high among the nations of the world. The people of Cuba are now helpless to decide their own destiny and the power of decision is now gone from their hands. Moreover, Cuba has become an armed camp bristling with modern weapons and crowded with non-Cuban troops. It represents the greatest military threat to the physical security of the mainland of the United States in our long history. For the first time our cities and towns, our military and industrial complexes, are within easy reach of enemy weaponry.

How did this all come about under our very gaze? (To be continued Sunday)
