The Biggest Magic

A FABLE FOR MODERNS

By LINDA AYRES, Age 9 1/2 Towers School

Once there was a magician who was supposed to be the greatest in the world.

He could find and do fantastic tricks of any kind. When he was little, he was always performing tricks and acts for his friends, but he was so poor he had to make hats out of fine grass.

He was always very generous and would never accept a penny.

One day, a circus came to town, but he had no money.

The whole town knew he wanted to go, so they all got together and got all their money and hid it.

He had no name, so they called him Mr. Professor.

Well, let's get on with it (the story).

Mr. Professor always took a walk through the woods. Just before he took the walk, all the people got their rocks and places where he would find it.

He found all sorts of money and put it under rocks and places where he would find it.

He found all sorts of money and couldn't imagine where it came from.

He went into town and bought himself a new suit and went to the circus.

It was quite funny because he had just enough to buy new clothes, popcorn, peanuts, soda pop and his fare for the circus.

It happened to be that their regular magician was sick so they announced it and everyone roared. "Let Mr. Magician do it!" So, he did.

He said, "What shall I do?"

They said, "Do anything."

He said, "All right, I have been working on this trick for weeks."

He went into the dressing room, and picked out a girl.

He lit a match. Then, he brought her out to show the people.

He asked her to blow out the match and she did and disappeared.

He asked a man to put his hand out and, there she was, standing on his hand.

A lady shouted out, "I think that is the biggest magic I ever saw."

Editor's Note: Linda's "The Biggest Magic" got an "A." If you have a "Fable for Moderns," written by your child, or by yourself, why not submit it to The Press? If you want it returned, please enclose a self-addressed and stamped envelope.
