BECKY

By BECKY SCHAEFFER

Once in a while, because I enjoy it and not because he needs one, I make my husband a shirt. He will occasionally see something in a shop window that takes his fancy, and I can usually make it for half the price. Recently, he saw an eight dollar shirt in a swank shop and I was able to reproduce it for four. The material used was Swagger Cloth, a new, silken finished rayon and arnel that is unquestionably the best suiting on the market.

Sewing for men can be a challenge. A young friend of ours is a boat racing champion and felt that he would like to have a more tailored jump suit than can be bought on the market. If any of you girls have been wanting to make a jump suit for your husband, and can't find a pattern, here's how it's done.

Measure your man for shirt and pants size. You may have to buy two patterns, because many men are a size smaller in the waist than the patterns allow for. The shirt should be cut out exactly as the pattern shows, except that the side seam should be tapered in slightly.

Carefully check your husband's back waist length, add one inch for freedom of movement, add seam allowance and cut off. If you want to use the pattern for a shirt, later on, fold up the pattern so that the part you would cut off is simply turned back.

In the situations where a jump suit is used, men usually prefer the slim trouser leg and better fitted hip. The way to eliminate bagginess is to trim the back pants piece down the inside leg seam. Start at the point and cut (for the average man, about an inch off the seam, tapering to nothing as you cut down the leg.

A smart style for jump suits that can not be bought is the button-down collar. This is put on after the zipper has been sewed into the suit. If your shirt pattern came with a separate facing, it will be just right to put in the zipper. But if the shirt front and facing are one, you will want to cut (or fold) your pattern just 5/8" beyond the center front line, so that the zipper will go exactly in the center of the suit.

The sleeves with the inverted V notch allow for action, and elastic at the waist also eases movement. Pants cuffs may be finished with an invisible stitch or simply with a machine hem. Cuffs are not in order. A cigarette pocket with a little zipper in the shirt is nice, other pockets are a matter of preference.

TODAY'S HINT:

When you want anything to last, and take a beating, try using heavy duty thread. It comes on a spool half way between the small and large sizes. You will have to buy more than the ordinary kind, as there's less to a spool, but the range of colors is very good.

Spanish Theme to Keynote Luncheon

Members of Las Madrecitas, South Bay Auxiliary of the Crippled Children's Guild of Orthopaedic Hospital, are completing final arrangements for Modas para Manana, fashion luncheon to be held Saturday Oct. 5 at the Pen and Quill Hotel.

The Spanish look currently sweeping the fashion world will be presented by Rene Cowley, fashion coordinator, in conjunction with Ensembles for sports, daytime and evening will be underscored with the proper foundations to give lady this year's sleek Spanish look.

Mr. Blackwell, Kow Kaneko and Ellis Porter are among the designers to be featured.

Guests will be greeted by the Mmes. David B. Congleton, William Hoffman, Arthur L. Zygmunt and Miss Karen Hansen, all wearing authentic Spanish costumes. Shades of clay, black and Spanish red will prevail in decorations, and there's even the flavor of Spain planned for the luncheon.

The show will be opened with a heel tapping, fiery flamenco by Diane George, USC co-ed and exponent of the 700 year old art. Ivan Scott's orchestra will provide music throughout the show.

A mystery drawing, sponsored by Genny of Palos Verdes Peninsula Plaza, and door prizes will add to festivities.

Co-chairman for the event are the Mmes. Howard S. Anderson and Arthur L. Zygmunt.

Assisting are the Mmes! Louis Bednarchik, Frank Bescoby, Ronald K. Florence, Hans Hansen, James R. Kaplan, Paul Klinghoffer, Mario Licho and Frank Watts.

Proceeds will be donated to the Pediatric Ward of Orthopaedic Hospital.
