Assignment TV

By TERRENCE O'FLAHERTY

I'm not sure if it's possible, within the limits of decorum placed on the press, to fully describe an experience I had this week, but I'll try. It involved a former strip-teaser who now conducts a TV talk show, a Chinese Hairless (that's a dog, at least it LOOKED like a dog), a press agent, and an assortment of Japanese waitresses in native costume.

All I came for was in interview. "Gypsy Rose eats dinner early," said the publicist. "Okay. How about 7 o'clock?" I asked. "No. More like 5:30. She goes to bed early."

"Well, make it a dark place," I said. "So people won't think I'm drinking in the afternoon." I pressed my black suit with the artificial shoulders and appeared promptly on the threshold of Canlis' Restaurant with a note pad and a feeling that lightning was about to strike.

I sat down with the publicist. Miss Lee was the last to arrive. Only someone who is blind and deaf could have overlooked her. She is blonde, tall, and loud. She wore a coat of what appeared to be blue and green knitted pot-holders. She carried a green shopping bag in one hand and a portable dog house in the other. Mercifully, its little plastic windows were fogged up concealing most of its occupant except what appeared to be a hairy tail on one end and a look of complete resignation on the other.

I made a lunge toward the exit but was restrained by three Japanese waitresses and the publicist. "You promised!" he cried. MISS LEE checked her livestock with a passing waiter who looked as if he had just been hit with a pie. Then she sat down and started talking, switching from one unrelated subject to another, leaving a thought dangling here and there. In the space of five minutes she discussed:

A system for reproducing salt water in fish tanks, the William Morris Agency, teenage pregnancy, circumcision, a proposal to change the age of statutory rape, the sinking of the Spanish Armada, how to remove a garter belt in public, and a hot morning meal she had ordered the week before at New York's Sheraton East.

"I've thrown-up warmer breakfasts," she said. I began to feel a little faint. Miss Lee delved quickly into the shopping bag and pulled out an aluminum tray with chopped meat on it. She pushed it toward me. "I have a pregnant dog in the lobby. This is her dinner. It cost 95 cents," she said brightly.

I TRIED to run but the publicist had cunningly tied my feet together with a wet cocktail napkin. By the time I had worked the knots loose all exits had been blocked. "I was all ready to fly off to Europe when my Japanese gardener gave me four bushel baskets of ripe tomatoes," she said.

"One at a time through the air?" I asked. "No, silly! They were from my garden and I stayed up until 4 a.m. preserving them in bottles. What an armful I almost missed the plane."

"Well, I've simply GOT to leave. I have four TV shows to do tomorrow," she said. So we marched single file through the restaurant to the cloakroom, all eyes upon us.

A MAN at a table pulled my sleeve as I passed and asked, "Who's the lady?" "A National Curiosity, Sir," I said. A waiter brought out the dog house. "Oh my little baby!" cried Miss Lee and opened the trap door. Out stepped a fat dog, swaying slightly on its feet. As a final question I asked the key to her success on television. "All I can possibly do is introduce my guests, then sit back and let them talk," she said. Even the dog looked startled.

Garden Checklist

1. Shade trees, flowering fruits and deciduous shrubs are still available bare-root at your nursery. Plant all bare-root material by the end of this month.
2. Ranunculus bulbs can still be planted. Or, if you set them out last fall, make a second planting for later bloom. They are also available started in flats.
3. Snails and slugs are active at this time of year. Scatter snail bait in strategic hiding places such as ivy and flower borders.
4. February is a good time to start establishing ground covers. Set out now they will have a chance to develop a large enough root system that will supply needed moisture when hot weather arrives. After planting, mulch with peat moss or ground bark to prevent weeds from taking over before plants fill in.
5. Prepare soil for vegetable planting. Set out perennial vegetables such as asparagus and artichokes. Plant seeds of beets, chard, lettuce and carrots. Some of these vegetables are available already started in flats. Rhubarb plantlets are still available in nurseries, and they are good-looking enough to grow in the flower garden.
