ADELINE DALEY

Blame It on Duncan Hines

Duncan Hines may have made himself a fortune recommending restaurants and inns, but it seems that every time I praise anything, all I ever receive are complaints.

Be it an eating place, movie, book, TV show or you name it, I can expect as many complaints as a department store the day after Christmas.

I have reached a point where I wouldn't recommend a water hole in the desert to thirsty travelers for fear they would tell me that the water tasted terrible.

Heading the list of items on which I am no longer venturing even the timidest of opinions are, of course, restaurants. Let Duncan Hines take the blame. Too often I have heard: "They must have changed chefs in that place you raved about because George and I never tasted such poorly prepared food in our lives."

"Did you try the Veal Scallopini?" I will ask, trying to ease out.

What do you think gave George indigestion for three days?" will be the irate reply.

They can twist my arm but you will never again hear me pass judgment on a movie—good or bad. Recently, for instance, I lavished praise on a film only to have a friend tell me later that she walked out on it. I guess the least I should have done is refund the admission price.

My opinions of the television shows must be relayed directly to the networks, because every show I enjoy and mention aloud eventually loses its sponsor. My seal of approval is beginning to compare with the whammy of appearing on the cover of Time magazine.

I don't have much better luck with making recommendations to my family. If I consider a particular young man to be fine, upstanding and sincere, he is dropped as "Dullsville" by my daughters. And the ones I would just as soon never see again are "dolls."

The last straw, however, was reached when I suggested to my husband that on his next trip to Chicago he look up a former classmate of mine and her husband.

"They're a trifric couple, Friendly, warm-hearted. She and I were the best of friends," I rhapsodized.

I could hardly wait until my husband's return to get a full report. "Did you call her?" I asked. I sure did."

"What happened?"
"Nothing. We didn't progress much beyond her first question when I telephoned her. Which was, 'Adeline who?'"
