

Behavior Text Long Overdue

Have you ever noticed that all of the books on child-parent relationships are one-sided, in that nobody worries about the "inner tensions" and "emotional problems" of parents? And whose nerves are more frazzled by 5 p. m. I ask you?

I want to see just one book jacket blurb which advertises: "A handy guide which ex-can become provoked into staging temper tantrums on being informed that a new car coat, costing $19.95, has been lost; on hearing television and radio sets continually turned on louder than World War II; and on observing how kids in ten minutes can convert a newly cleaned living room into something which resembles the aftermath of Hurricane Hannah.

Comparisons: Nothing is more harmful to the ego of a mother or father than when they are compared unfavorably with others of their kind and hear, "Joey's parents are much nicer than you." And plains to children behavior patterns at various adult age levels," or, "A reference manual no child under ten should be without!" Some of the chapters would include:

Eating Behavior: Adults usually enjoy a quiet atmosphere at meal-time. They also do not like to see broccoli shoved under plates in order that the individual can qualify for dessert.

Sleeping Habits: Studies have shown that most parents like to sleep later than 6 a. m. Sunday mornings Mothers become especially disturbed by children who shake them awake and demand, "You promised you'd fix waffles this morning."

Anger, Prevention of: Although usually sweet, lovable and charming, parents then a list of his possessions occasionally want privacy, especially when either of them is taking a bath. If it is necessary to speak to a parent at that time, it is wise to request friends to remain in the hall.
