Law in Action

A person who falls into bad company may find that he is to blame for their crimes.

In a recent case Bill and Paul met in a neighborhood cafe. After a few drinks they went out for some excitement, and found it. Paul thought it would be a good idea to rob a service station. Bill went along. The service station man was ready for them. He shot both Bill and Paul as they fled, killing Paul.

Oddly enough, the district attorney accused Bill, the survivor, and the court convicted him of murder as well as robbery, though he had no gun.

How could that be? The law holds a person guilty of murder if he takes part in a "dangerous" crime, like robbery where somebody gets killed. If a bullet hits a victim or a bystander during the robbery, the robber may be convicted of murder, though he fired no shot.

Here, as a direct result of the robbery attempt, Bill's partner in crime was shot by the intended victim. Bill could well have to take a murder rap for taking part in a dangerous crime which ended in a killing.

In another case, a storekeeper, while trying to shoot the robber, got excited and killed a fellow employee. The robber, not the storekeeper, was convicted of murder.
