ADELINE DALEY

Family Democracy Strictly for Birds

As useful as I have always found reading the works of Dr. Spock and other experts on child care, I'm afraid what this household needs even more is a simplified version of Blackstone, in order to settle some of the disputes between our kids.

It just might lessen the image we have in the neighborhood of sounding like "Riot in Cell Block 11."

What I have in mind is a handbook, "What to Do Until the Lawyers Come," which would rule on such controversies as whose turn it is to do the dishes, who gets the car tonight, who has "title" to the cat (until feeding time, when I get full custody).

That way too, I could blame the penal code when inflicting punishment, instead of having to listen to my kids huddled together in the living room singing, "We Shall Overcome."

But my kids aren't the ones who need legal guidance; I do. Because, believe me, there's nothing more unsettling than to assign Brian to clean out the basement rumpus room and have him recite the Child Labor Act of 1924 which I am told, "limits, regulates and prohibits undue labor of persons under 18 years of age."

You don't suppose he'll tell the authorities that he has to take a caged canary with him on the job as a safety measure?

Moreover, I don't know how or where Elaine first heard about the "Jackie Coogan Law" but she reminds me of it every time I borrow money from her, just because this particular ruling protects the finances of children under 21 (would you believe 5 years?) from grasping parents.

Of course, I never hear any statutes quoted around here which could be construed as favoring parents. And, Good Lord, you can't take your own flesh and blood into Small Claims Court because she ruined your last pair of nylon!

It's just wishful thinking to hope that schools will be more cooperative with parents and declare, "The responsibilities of teaching reading, writing and arithmetic (particularly New Math) will be vested in the schools and the schools alone and any parent who abridges this authority will be duly prosecuted."

And as much as I hate to make a "federal case" of it, how can I see that their household chores are finished unless we agree to a constitution which begins, "We, the members of this family, in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, ensure domestic tranquility and see that the beds are made and dishes are done etc. . . ."

But you know what I favor more?—absolute monarchy.

Benefit Show Scheduled for Friday Night

A benefit show for the Southwest Association for Retarded Children will be presented by the Bettie Thomas Studio Friday evening in the Torrance High School Auditorium. The show will begin at 7:30.

Members of the cast will include 150 children performing under the direction of Thea Hockett, Natalie Norman, Ruth Spere, and Robin Yale. They will perform in ballet, tap, acrobatics, parading, and twirling.

The show will be divided into four sections and the four seasons of the year will be represented in song and dance.

The opening and closing music will be directed by Bettie Thomas and will feature the students of Betty Bristol, Gail Bristol, Marilyn Cummings, Robert Gilmore, James Haney, and Mrs. Thomas.

The vocal numbers in the show will be under the direction of Nadine Nickol.

The Southwest Association for Retarded Children (SARC) is a group of parents, relatives, and friends who organized in 1958 to bring expanded services to the mentally retarded children and adults of the area and to offer help to those persons seeking guidance in such matters.

Apathy Seen As a Threat To Freedoms

Richard Barkley, Republican state senate candidate and a longtime Westchester resident, told a Redondo Beach audience that the greatest threat to freedom resulted from the apathy of those who refuse to be involved.

Speaking at a reception arranged by Mrs. Robert Cakbread of Redondo Beach, Barkley urged the group of community leaders to stress the importance of each citizen participating in the day-to-day workings of society.

Barkley, a veteran of the Korean War, is a paraplegic as the result of injuries received during the war. Despite his handicap, Barkley drives his own specially equipped car, and continues to pilot a light plane on frequent business and pleasure flights.
