

Nine Youngsters Have the Answer

In the jet age, most of us have become aware that international travel is commonplace. But the extent to which the world is shrinking was brought home forcefully to a fourth-grade teacher about to begin a lesson on Japan.

The teacher, Mrs. Esther Salzberg of Madrona Elementary School, asked her students if any of them had known of anyone who had ever been to Japan.

"Nine hands flew up. 'I lived there for three years,' one blonde girl said.

"I spent a week there during my summer vacation this year," a boy added.

"And I visited my grandmother there," another girl explained.

Two more students had fathers who had been stationed in Japan after the war and one student's grandparents lived in Japan. Still another youngster explained that his parents had honeymooned in Japan.

But the prize was won by a smiling almond-face boy who chuckled, "I've had family connections there for several generations."

Results of the question was a "share-the-travel" table on which the nine students displayed artifacts which their families acquired in Japan.

The nine students were Denise Spratt, Courtney Pouffer, Tammy Caron, Stephanie Brown, Sarah Gournier, Kim Holt, Janett Miller, Annette Ravitch, and Joel Omatsu.

DISPLAY ARTIFACTS . . . Denise Spratt (center) displays a Japanese walking stick which her father used when he climbed Mt. Fujiyama during a class at Madrona Elementary School. Artifacts from Japan were shown to the class after Mrs. Esther Salzberg asked how many of her students knew someone who had been to Japan. Nine students raised their hands. Others in the picture are Stephanie Brown (left), who showed a masked dancing doll, and Courtney Pouffer, with a noodle bowl.
