Vetoes Stand as Solons End Work

Capital News Service
SACRAMENTO — The two houses of the California legislature have adjourned their first five-day governor's veto session and many expressed the hope there wouldn't be many more of them.

The five-day session produced nothing other than ordery, as the Republicans held to a man in voting against overriding any of the 63 bills Governor Reagan vetoed. In addition, the Republicans voted against restoring any of the 43 budget items which Reagan blue-penciled last June to reach a balanced budget.

If anything was accomplished during the week, it was the approval of a bill during a special session which corrected an earlier mistake made by the lawmakers. The bill corrects the language in the school finance bill passed by the regular session, which could have cost the state some $50 million a year.

THE DEMOCRATS in the assembly attempted to override about four bill and two budget item deletions. In the senate, similar attempts were made on a number of items. The debate, intended by the Democrats to embarrass the governor and inform the public of his veto actions, changed no votes.

Long before the week was over, a number of legislators were becoming critical of the need for the five-day session, with indications a measure might be put on next year's election ballot to eliminate it.

ASSEMBLYMAN Robert T. Monagan (R-Tracy) GOP floor-leader in the lower house, in opposing the attempts to override Reagan's vetoes, noted that the legislature would be in session in January and could take action on bills at that time which members felt were worthwhile now.

In the assembly, the debate over veto overrides produced considerable party bickering and tempers flared on a number of occasions.
