

Around the World with Stan Delaplane

HONOLULU — On the airport road, just before you get to Honolulu airport building, there are a dozen lei sellers' huts. Tell the driver to stop. Pick up a few to bring home — $1 or 2 each, and they're fresh. Nice gifts.

The carnation and orchid leis last best. The white flowers—pikake and ginger—only go about 24 hours. Maybe better if you keep them in the refrigerator when not wearing them.

Usually the stewardess on the plane has plastic bags to put them in. But don't count on it—they didn't have them on my last flight. There are plastic bags in your hotel room for bathing suits. Take them with you. And get a couple of extras from the maid.

"Are there leis or plants you cannot bring home from Hawaii?"

Several flowers won't pass the agricultural inspection at the ticket counter. But lei sellers don't sell these to you. You can't bring in those luscious mangoes.

Don't figure to smuggle in your suitcase. The fragrance of them builds up like spilled perfume. When they open your bag for inspection, it will be most embarrassing. Hila hila too much, brudda.

"Bringing flowers home from Tahiti?"

No can do. You have to throw them away before you get on the airplane. Buy the shell leis. There are dozens of Tahitians selling them at the airport at Tahiti. Very cheap and very good looking.

"I think I read that Mexico no longer requires tourist cards or vaccination certificates. Is that right?"

Mexico does not require vaccination certificates from the U. S. anymore. And the U.S. no longer requires them from Americans returning to America. But Mexico does require a tourist card. The change is that you no longer pay a fee for it.

Get the tourist card from a Mexican consulate. Or the airline you fly on. Or you can get it at the border if you are driving. The rules say "some

Filling of Oroville Dam Begins

SACRAMENTO—Two steel gates were lowered into place to seal off Diversion Tunnel No. 1 and water began backing up behind Oroville Dam last Tuesday for the first time.

Officials of the Department of Water Resources said the Feather River, source of devastating floods in the past, now is harnessed for all time. About 350,000 acre feet of water had been stored temporarily behind the partially completed dam several years ago in a flood emergency.

Oroville Dam is 770 feet high and the stopping of water Tuesday came four years of the day after the initial flow of water through Diversion Tunnel No. 1. The department estimated water would build up behind the dam within two days to the level of its second diversion tunnel, through which releases of water will be made to meet needs of water users.

Peninsula Woman Honored For Service to Children

How can you fully repay a woman for her efforts as a foster mother, a hospital volunteer for bedridden youngsters, and as a friend of refugee families?

You can't. But at least partial payment has been made to such a woman, Mrs. Jane Hall of Palos Verdes Estates.

She was honored by Los Angeles County recently for outstanding service to children, according to Supervisor Borton W. Chace.

BUT EVEN the Family and Children's Division of the Department of Public Social Services — sponsors of the award — agree the plaque won't mean as much to Mrs. Hill as the satisfaction she receives from serving children in need.

"Mrs. Hall is an outstanding example of a friend in need," Chace said. "The help she gives to children who are in difficult situations, through no fault of their own, sets a good example for all of us."

Mrs. Hall, the daughter of South Bay Municipal Court Judge and Mrs. Donald Armstrong, lives at 789 Via del Monte. She has a record of more than two decades of service to youngsters.

SHE IS the natural mother of four children and the adoptive mother of another. Her work ranges from providing temporary foster homes to editing a magazine for bedridden youngsters.

For years she worked with the American Field Service Committee and took exchange students into her home. She also put in many hours for the Church World Service, an organization which helps re-establish refugee families in the United States.

She worked primarily with Hungarian and Dutch families, finding them homes and generally immersing herself into their process of readjustment.

MORE RECENTLY, she has taken an interest in providing temporary homes for youngsters in need.

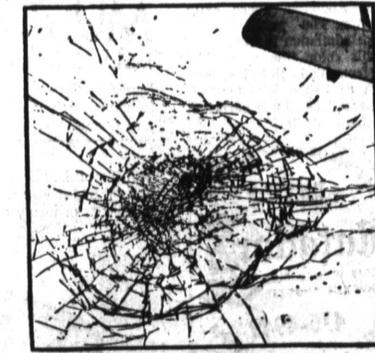

It started two years ago when a 5-year-old boy, rejected first by his mother and then his father, faced still another crisis. The foster family with whom he lived had to leave the area, and a replacement was necessary.

Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Hall filled the breach by obtaining a foster home license and moving the boy in with them. They adopted him.

In March, 1967, the Halls were asked to take temporary custody of an oriental teenage girl with something of a "hippie" personality. In a short time, the Halls had influenced her to such positive extent that the girl now is a serious candidate for college.

Mary Wise menu and shopping guide. The boneless turkey roast, the newest and most modern way to serve turkey this season, makes a natural team-mate for a savory prune stuffing. Ideal for the small family, the turkey roast is all meat, thereby eliminating the usual amount of waste from bones and skin and giving you perfect slices every time. The dressing, easily prepared with a packaged stuffing mix such as (Mrs. Cubbison's) Corn Bread "Stuffin", is full of plump, tender prunes, providing additional flavor and texture to the prepared mix. Bake the prune dressing in the oven with the turkey roast during the last hour of roasting. Placed around the turkey roast, the dressing balls provide an attractive garnish for the festive holiday platter. TURKEY ROAST WITH PRUNE STUFFING 13-14 lb. boneless turkey roast 1/2 cup butter or margarine 1 cup finely chopped celery 1 6 1/2-oz. (Mrs. Cubbison's) Corn Bread "Stuffin" 1 tbs. frozen or freeze-dried chopped chives 1 1/2 cups plumped California prunes

The last thing Frank expected was someone running the stop sign.

Stop signs don't stop cars. Drivers stop cars. Make sure you do and make sure he has. There's very little satisfaction in being dead when you're dead. Whenever, whenever you drive... drive defensively. Watch out for the other guy. He may be the kind who'll stop at nothing. Watch out for the Other Guy. The very last thing.
