Fuel Cell Research Under Way

A $20-million research program over a three-year span to develop a marketable natural gas-powered fuel cell has been announced by a national scientific research organization.

Announcement was made at a press conference in Washington, D. C., and simultaneously in Los Angeles where subsidiaries of Pacific Lighting Corp. reported they are among 22 natural gas utilities across the country which are supporting the research effort.

A fuel cell generates electricity by continuous chemical reaction, without moving parts.

THE PACIFIC Lighting subsidiaries are Southern California and Southern Counties Gas Cos., and Pacific Lighting Service and Supply Co.

which provides a major part of the out-of-state natural gas supply for the southern California area.

The 22 utilities have joined together in a group called TARGET (Team to Advance Research for Gas Energy Transformation Inc.), a non-profit organization with headquarters in Chicago, Ill.

Pratt Whitney Aircraft, a division of United Aircraft Corp., will undertake the TARGET program. The Institute of Gas Technology of Chicago will be subcontractor to Pratt & Whitney.

SPACE AGE technology will be utilized by TARGET. Pratt & Whitney fuel cell powerplants, using hydrogen instead of natural gas, presently are in use in the government's Apollo lunar program. The firm also has built and demonstrated several experimental fuel cell powerplants using natural gas.

Goal of TARGET is development of a natural gas and air-operated "comfort package" for homes, apartments, and businesses which will be better than any of the methods presently used for environmental control, it was announced.

THE PACKAGE will provide, it is hoped, for complete control of temperature and humidity year around along with generation of electricity. Participating gas companies have pledged the major part of the $20 million needed to support TARGET. Pratt & Whitney Aircraft also will contribute.
