The new place in Italy is Vico Equense on the Bay of Naples. A friend of mine with Alitalia, the Italian airline, checked it out for me and says:

"The big attraction is a treasure trove of tombs, 2500 years old, they discovered last year while building—you won't believe this but it's true—a new pizza parlor. It's called 'Pizza de la Mura'—pizza by the yard. When they excavated they ran into the crypts and have opened 150 of them. All sorts of museum objects."

"The small town is on the Bay of Naples. Trains run from Naples every hour—about $3.85. (You go free from Rome to Naples on a States-to-Rome air ticket.)"

"No deluxe hotels but two first-class: La Axide and Capo la Gala. About $12 double with breakfast. Three second-class good hotels. Best are the Mary and the Sporting—about $9 double. Alitalia will get folders and things for people who want to go."

"Do you know whether it is safe to drink the water in Italy?"

All my friends in Rome drink the tap water. I don't know water sources in all the countryside. I drink bottled Fiuggi, the best of all spring waters in the world. Michelangelo wrote a couple of pages about it—it did wonders for him. If you read the small print on the bottle, you'll find it recommended by long ago Popes, too.

"... something off the beaten track, really, in Europe."

Europe's tracks are pretty well beaten, girls. But you could try the gypsy caravans in Ireland. You rent the horse-drawn wagon that sleeps five for $59 a week. Includes a gas stove, supplies, maps, and tours. "Giddap"—and away you go. Wonderful countryside. I'd head for the wild, misty west country in Connemara.

I'm getting interesting letters from my daughter who is doing Scandinavia solo. "I flew on SAS to Copenhagen and arrived with no reservations, but SAS got me a room in a student hostel for $2. Student hostels are better than youth hostels because they don't have such an early curfew."

The letters are sketchy and full of gaps. But I gather she's traveling by boat (to Finland) and by train (Sweden) and having a great time and meeting lots of kids her age. It must be cheap, because I didn't finance it.

And you could write Scandinavian National Travel Offices, 505 Fifth Avenue, New York City. Ask for "off-the-beaten-track through Scandinavia."

"I am a woman alone and would like a place in Mexico that is really primitive. Not Acapulco and things like that."

I've run into towns in Mexico where they don't even speak Spanish. The problem is there aren't any hotels either. I think Patzcuaro in the state of Michoacan would be just primitive enough for you.

State Orders Transfer of Beer Permit

Capitol News Service
SACRAMENTO—The state department of alcoholic beverage control has ordered the revocation of the on-sale beer license of Robert C. Willingham, the Play Girl, 20706 S. Normandie Ave., Torrance, unless it is transferred to an acceptable person within 90 days.

The licensee was charged with permitting female employees to wait on and mingle with the customers while in "topless attire." The department said the license must be transferred to the new owner with the condition that Rodney F. Willingham would have no direct or indirect interest in the operation of the license.

The transfer must be made by 90 days from June 9.

It's a Tarascan Indian town WITH two pretty good hotels. Good Indian market under the laurel trees in the plaza. If it isn't primitive enough, you can go to villages within a day where people live as they did before the Conquest. If it's too primitive, you are half a day from Morelia, an attractive town with excellent hotels. It was the summer home of the Spanish Viceroy.

This is spring or summer country. It's high, pine woods land. I nearly froze one winter night in Patzcuaro, even with an electric heater under my chair. They build of wood and stone. And central heating—what is that, Senor? You could base on Oaxaca in the south. A lovely town of arches and jacaranda trees and good hotels. From there you can make trips by four-wheel drive or horseback into remote Zapotec villages. Better have a guide or some local man who knows the way. Back country people are isolated. Suspicious of strangers. You must know and follow customs.

Glendale Federal Shows Major Gains in Savings

Glendale Federal Savings and Loan Association received more money in savings in the first three months of 1967 than in any previous quarter in its history, Raymond D. Edwards, president of the association, has announced. During the first quarter of this year, $29.7 million in new savings were received, compared with the previous high of $28.4 million in the first quarter of 1963, Edwards said. Only $9.4 million were received in the first quarter last year. Glendale Federal also paid a record high in dividends to its savers. A total of $8.1 million in dividends was paid on March 31. At the same time, Edwards announced that during the first quarter this year more than $19 million in loans were made by the association to help Southern Californians build, buy, or remodel homes. This compares with $14.2 mil-
