

Kanine Korner

By Francis X. Lohmann

Many presidents have adored dogs! Dogs have found warm spots in the hearts of chief executives starting with our first president, George Washington.

An interesting story concerning President Warren G. Harding and his beloved Airedale, Laddie Boy, recently crossed my desk which I would like to share with my readers.

Harding had a warm, loving heart, and dogs found a large place in it.

Laddie Boy owned the White House, the President, the Capitol Building, the Capitol grounds, and just about everything else in sight. He loved to romp and play on the grounds from the White House back door to the Washington Monument. He was the soul of play, a great favorite with all the attendants in and about the presidential domain.

EVEN THE President's private office was not off limits to Laddie Boy's playful antics. Important and grave conferences were often interrupted and delayed by the sudden entrance of this delightful Airedale, who insisted on shaking hands with the President and having Mr. Harding take the ball out of Laddie's mouth and throw it in play.

One day the President and Mrs. Harding stepped into their official limousine at the White House door. Laddie Boy rushed up with his tail in motion and his happy bark ready to leap in for his accustomed drive. But he was held back, for this time the President was starting on a long journey across the United States into Canada and Alaska and back. A long journey indeed, one which death ended in a Seattle hotel.

But Laddie Boy knew nothing of this. He did not read the newspapers announcing the death of his beloved master. Every day he'd go to the door of the White House and look eagerly down the driveway. He'd look at every automobile that passed, for in his doggie-like mind he reasoned that an auto had taken his master away and that an auto would bring his master back.

LADDIE BOY was never to feel the loving pat on the head from the hand of a great hearted president.

After a time Laddie Boy died in grief and the school children all over the land contributed their pennies so that today in the Smithsonian Institute there stands a bronze statue to Laddie Boy for his loving devotion. It is a recognition by all humanity of the loyalty, devotion, and love a dog can have for his master.

BARKS AND YAPS—One of my all time favorite motion picture actors, Glenn Ford, is president of the Eye Dog Foundation, an astute organization existing for the commendable purpose of supplying eyes for the blind in the form of a faithful guide dog. Not only do the needy sightless receive guide dogs free of charge but during the month's training period the students live on Eye Dog Foundation premises in a dormitory provided by the Foundation where they are fed and housed free of charge.

Glenn Ford has informed this reporter that the Eye Dog Foundation is holding a hockey game, March 7, spotlighting the Los Angeles Kings vs. the Oakland Seals at The Forum, to raise funds for the newly proposed 7 1/2-acre training facility in Topanga Canyon. A champagne supper follows in the Forum Club. Tickets are scaled at $25, $50, and $15, obtainable from the Eye Dog Foundation Benefit Headquarters, 9887 Santa Monica Blvd., Beverly Hills, Calif. For further info in regards to this most worthy sporting event, interested readers can call 274-8307.

I RECENTLY spotted this epitaph on a dog's tombstone: "Major, Born a Dog, Died a Gentleman." Once upon a time a name was all that was needed to open up a savings account. Not so in the case of Bernie S. Bernard. A deposit was made for him recently by Pat Graham in a Kettle Falls, Wash., bank and a paw print was used instead of a name. Bernie is a St. Bernard. How about that?

Twenty-five canine heroes who served with the U. S. Forces in 1944 are buried in a war cemetery at Agana, Guam. The rare Ibizan Hound dates back to 2000 B.C., making the breed one of the oldest on record.

BREED OF THE WEEK—Brittany Spaniel. The AKC recognized the Brittany Spaniel in 1934 and since its acceptance has shown steadfast annual increases in registrations that indicate a healthy growth of national popularity for this most unusual member of the spaniel family. The Brittany has two differences that set him apart from the group to which, by inheritance, he belongs.

First of all, the Brittany enjoys the distinction of being the only spaniel that points birds. Secondly, his appearance and behavior is so reminiscent of the Setter, even though this breed has the retrieving instinct of the spaniel.

THE BRITTANY Spaniel hails from the historic peninsula region of Northwestern France, and of course it was here that he received his name. People living in this area pretty much developed the Brittany as he is known today.

In the United States the breed numbers many show champions from among his ranks. Brittany Spaniels are registered with both the AKC and the Field Dog Stud Book.

The Brittany Spaniel tips the scales at about 35 pounds and in height 19 inches.

ECC President Named to National Advisory Board

Dr. Stuart E. Marsee, president of El Camino College, has been named to the Advisory Committee on the Academic Administration Internship program of the American Council of Education.

Although the council has been in operation since 1918, the Academic Administration Internship program, made possible by funds from the Ford Foundation, is only four years old. The program is designed to encourage colleges and universities to establish and support on their campuses regular, ongoing internships for potential college administrators.

Dr. Marsee believes one of the most effective ways of developing leadership is through internship programs. El Camino has had successful experiences with them, he said.

A similar program, administered by UCLA, is the Kellogg Foundation, which centers around junior colleges while the program of the American Council of Education will be broader and include all colleges.

Dr. Marsee is the only representative of a junior college appointed to the committee. Other committee members are Chairman Homer D. Babbidge Jr., president of the University of Connecticut; Lanier Cox, director of studies of higher education, University of Texas; Archie R. Dykes, chancellor, University of Tennessee; David R. Goddard, provost, University of Pennsylvania; and Sister M. Therese Waldmann, academic dean, Nazareth College.

Schools Plan For Future

What's new in Torrance schools? This question was answered by Dr. J. H. Hull, superintendent of schools, and Dr. A. N. Posner, assistant superintendent of instruction, before 200 civic and education leaders at a luncheon meeting of the Educational Council of Torrance.

"Society decides what the schools will teach," Dr. Hull pointed out. "Educators merely decide how to teach it."

To find out what Torrance residents want taught in their schools, the Torrance Unified School District polls 10 per cent of its parents each year, Dr. Hull stated. "Every summer committees of teachers meet to figure out ways to upgrade the curriculum," he added.

A BIRD'S-EYE view of new projects currently being conducted in Torrance schools was depicted in a slide presentation narrated by Dr. Posner.

Projects ranged from summer pre-school classes for culturally-deprived four-year-olds to honor classes for academically talented high school students.

Reading projects depicted in the presentation included a programmed learning setup where children are permitted to progress at their own rate by using printed materials which emphasize phonetics and the linguistic method; reading laboratories featuring such machines as the scanner, the shadow scope, and the Craig reader, and listening posts where children follow a story in a book while hearing it read by the teacher on a tape recorder.

IN A PILOT program for educationally handicapped students, confidence and success are built by providing immediate rewards to students upon successful completion of assignments, Dr. Posner said.

Elementary school youngsters are taught the fundamentals of the free enterprise system in a new elementary economics program sponsored by the National Council on Economic Education. While younger students study goods and services produced by local businesses, a group of middle-grade students recently learned about free enterprise by actually researching and marketing products, he pointed out.

To prepare themselves to use new laboratory materials and new methods of instruction in science, 100 teachers spent five Saturdays attending workshops sponsored by Pepperdine College. Emphasis in the "new" science will be on providing students with "keys" for unlocking new problems, Dr. Posner commented. Instead of reading about objects and events, they will participate in them.

NEW HIGH school courses described in the illustrated lecture included a chemistry course designed especially for vocational students, a course in aeronautics which offers students an opportunity to prepare for the FAA private pilot written examination, the first job training summer course ever to be offered in the State of California, a pilot program in family-life education for tenth graders, arts and humanities, and a survey of musical history.

Vocational offerings depicted by Dr. Posner as preparing high school students for employment included radio broadcasting and communication skills, power mechanics, stenographic skills, nursing skills, and a child care class.

"Any school system worth its salt is always working on the growing edge of education," Dr. Posner stated. "It refuses to rest on its laurels. It avoids complacency. It moves forward."
