

'Il Trovatore'

Civic Symphony Scores Success

Last week's performance of the opera "Il Trovatore" was a triumph for the South Bay Torrance Civic Symphony, it's amazing conductor, Elyse Aehle, and all the nearly 200 people responsible for the production.

From the first ovation which greeted the petite maestro's entrance to the last bow when a large bouquet of red roses was put in her arms, the music flowed like magic. Master of the difficult art of "opera," Miss Aehle inspired the huge cast with such confidence that, as they said, they sang and played even better than their best.

GOOD DIET

A good diet, including a reducing diet, should be built about the four basic food groups of milk and dairy foods, vegetables and fruits, meats, and breads and cereals.

every aria was greeted by enthusiastic applause. She was in rare voice and her performance in the role of Leonora could not be surpassed.

FREDRIC GATES with his magnificent voice contributed a superb rendering of the part of Il Trovatore. The dramatic role of Azucena was beautifully sung and acted by Kathleen Wadell who made a very appealing sorceress. The sweet presence of Inez as sung by the attractive soprano, Winifred Mewborn, was like the perfumed breath of a zephyr fresh from a field of blossoms. Enrico Porta as the Count, sang so well and with such appeal that after hearing him sing "Il Balen" everyone wanted to let him have the girl and skip the rest of the opera. He is a great artist!

Resonant-voiced Robert Foulk, as narrator (a very vital part of the performance) was both dramatic and entertaining as he made the audience feel that he understood the Italian text.

The opening of the first act was very effective. As he did throughout the opera, Stage Director Jan Darian utilized to the fullest the meager possibilities of the auditorium. There was an ovation when the curtain opened on the scene of the soldiers, servants, and Ferrando silhouetted against the lights from within the castle in the open doorway.

EDMUND NAJERA sang as Ferrando with beautiful voice and consummate musicianship. The young students from West High in their gold and maroon uniforms and their cerise and purple livery sang well and added immensely to the glamour of the scene.

The high point of the evening was the exciting "Gypsy Scene." Eighty young members of the West High Choir most ably trained by their director, Donnaly Fenn, singing like young artists, milling about in brilliant costumes (all original), the anvils, the fire, and Gypsy Caldron, all made a thrilling, unforgettable impression. Congratulations, young students.

'Rights' Contest Winners

Students at El Camino College received dual honors from the recent Los Angeles County Bill of Rights Contest, winning awards in both college and individual competition. Terry Church, sophomore and a history major, placed second in the essay contest for Bill of Rights Weeks. Church was awarded a $50 savings bond and a chance to enter his essay in the statewide competition. Stressing the importance of the Bill of Rights by making as many people as possible aware of it, four students, working on behalf of the ECC Associated Students, compiled a book showing that 240,000 persons were really made cognizant of Bill of Rights Week.

The committee was composed of James Mayer, community chairman; Rochelle Rosse, secretarial chairman; Robin Roy, publicity chairman; and Nolan Noble, general chairman. Faculty advisor was Mrs. Aviva James, coordinator of student activities. The book won third place at a college level, meriting $250.

Young boys can look for leadership to a man like Cyril Jenkins, whose life is a dynamic example of the best men have to give.

A Los Angeles County fireman for 17 years, Rolling Hills Captain Cy Jenkins typifies the courage and sense of responsibility that characterize firemen everywhere who chose a job that demands the ultimate in commitment—that they stand ready to risk their lives. Cy Jenkins goes one step beyond. As a long-time Scout Master, he has spent countless hours helping young boys discover and develop the inner resources necessary to lead a valuable life. Through the rigors of long-distance hiking and the challenge of mountaineering, Jenkins has revealed to them the rewards of commitment. "No one has quit yet," he says proudly. With men like Jenkins to inspire them, boys can begin to view their own potential with confidence.
