

Kanine Korner

A person needs only to visit just about any animal shelter to suddenly realize the sad truth that the human race in many instances is unworthy of dogs and of other members of the animal kingdom.

I visited one such animal shelter about a month ago. I saw close to a hundred dogs peering through the cage bars. There would be a look of hope in their eyes, an ear would go up, a body would stiffen into alert attention. Perhaps a seemingly familiar voice would be heard, a familiar human scent sniffed.

Then came the inevitable disappointment. "No, he's not the one. Will my master never come," seemed to be the cry in unison. "What has happened to him?" And the dogs then settled back into a corner of the cage, their heads on their paws pretending to be unconcerned.

TAKE THIS column's advice and don't consider visiting a dog pound unless you are prepared to come home sad hearted and with your inner self greatly disturbed.

All of us who love and cherish dogs can help curtail business at dog pounds by keeping the streets free of strays, by reducing promiscuous breeding, by demanding better dog owners, and by limiting dog ownership to good homes and to people who deserve a dog's adoration.

Additionally, by adhering to these thoughts I've just outlined, many precious dogs will be kept out of the hands of vivisectors. And that's for dog-gone sure!

THIS TOUCHING story recently crossed my desk. A lady died and left $1,000 for the care of her beloved Great Dane. Some of her so-called surviving relatives indignantly scoffed at the idea of leaving money for the care of a dog. But get this—11 days later the Great Dane died. The dog had refused to eat or drink since his mistress' death.

The official report said—"The Great Dane died of a broken heart." I could further comment on this pathetic story but I think the punchline is self explanatory and all I can add is thank God for dogs.

BREED OF THE WEEK—

American Eskimo . . . The name Spitz designates an entire family of dogs which includes the Pomeranian, Norwegian Elkhound, Keeshond, Chow Chow, and various sled-dog breeds. They all have the same general conformation and type of coat although they vary enormously in size and coloration. Spitz is also the most frequently used name for one of the best known house pet breeds in America, the American Eskimo.

The American Eskimo indicates his heritage as a member of the Spitz family by his tapered muzzle, alertly carried pointed ears, dense, stand-off coat, curly plumed tail, and compact, short-bodied conformation.

Dog authorities are of the opinion that the American Eskimo is descended from the Samoyed. This theory is substantiated by the strong resemblance (with the exception of his size) between the two breeds, a likeness which extends even to coloration and the attractive smiling facial expression which is typical of the two breeds.

IT IS interesting to note that the breed was one time known as the German Spitz because the first specimens brought to this country were from Germany. The American Eskimo is not AKC registerable but the United Kennel Club does. The name, American Eskimo, is a happy choice as it combines both the breed's arctic ancestry and his status as a popular breed in the United States.

The American Eskimo is bright, quick to learn, eager, and acutely affectionate in temperament. Although this fine citizen of dogdom is not unfriendly, the American Eskimo does not take readily to strangers, which makes him a dependable guardian dog.

A scale down version of his handsome relative, the Samoyed, he is an ideal size for a house dog, large enough to make a hardy, active playmate for children but not too big for the average home or expensive to maintain. With these multi-fold assets, in addition to his snowy gleaming coat and dark expressive eyes, it is no wonder that the American Eskimo is one of America's favorite pets.

New York Opera Company Panel Discussion Slated

The Greater Los Angeles Press Club, 600 N. Vermont Ave., will be the site tomorrow, for a luncheon-panel discussion welcoming New York City Opera on its second appearance here, it was announced today by John Lowry, Press Club president.

The humorous side of opera production will be the subject of the field experts.

The panel will consist of the company's general director, Julius Rudel; leading artists soprano Beverly Sills and bass-baritone Norman Treigle; music critic Martin Bernheimer; and television executive Alan Wagner, who will serve as moderator.
