Kanine Korner

By Francis X. Lohmann

Vicky, Pasha, and King Timahoe are the latest canines-in-residence at the White House. Vicky, a Miniature Poodle, and Pasha, a Yorkshire Terrier, are long-time pets of President and Mrs. Nixon. King is an Irish Setter puppy, a birthday gift to the President from his staff.

Only in America, and especially in Southern California, are there seemingly countless anti-dog ordinances. I can't think of a single pro-law that really protects man's most loyal and loving friend, the dog. But the city fathers certainly gauge the poor suffering, already over-taxed dog-owning public with their annual license fees. How about that?

With the advent of the Nixon dogs, a new policy has been initiated in White House hospitality. They are sharing the executive mansion with former President Johnson's Collie, Blanco, currently remaining in Washington.

The dogs' immediate predecessors were the Johnson Family's Beagles, among them the well-known Him and Her; Yuki, a cross breed stray that Mrs. Patrick Nugent found and gave to her father; and of course, Blanco.

During the Kennedy Administration the White House was home, at one time or another, to nine dogs. These included four puppies, the offspring of Mrs. Kennedy's Welsh Terrier, Charlie, and Pushinka, daughter of a Russian canine astronaut and the gift of Premier Nikita Khrushchev to Caroline Kennedy.

White House dogs sometimes have been almost as famous as their masters. President Franklin Roosevelt's Scottish Terrier, Fala, was a case in point. Other presidential pets, such as the Eisenhower's Weimaraner or Margaret Truman's Cocker Spaniel, garnered less acclaim.

Almost every executive family has owned one or more dogs. Among them were President Calvin Coolidge's Wirehaired Fox Terrier, Peter Pan, and Collie, Prudence Prim; President Herbert Hoover's German Shepherd, King Tut, and Norwegian Elkhound, Weeje; and the dogs that began the presidential tradition: Mopsey Captain, and Lady George Washington's beloved Foxhound.

BOWSER BROWSINGS — Richard Calore, publisher of the nationally circulated Voice of the Voiceless Magazine guests on my radio version of Kanine Korner in a half hour special tomorrow at 4 p.m. via KTYM 1460. Richard Calore is an undisputed champion of animal welfare, a 20th Century St. Francis; and his broadcast should prove of great interest to everyone who loves dogs, cats and all of God's dumb but none the less loved creatures.

It is most interesting to note that only one dog in six million reaches stardom in movies and TV... In Switzerland, a dog can travel by season ticket, which includes his photo, on any public conveyance.

DIRECTORY PLAN WINS APPROVAL

The California Public Utilities Commission has granted Pacific and General telephone companies authority to continue publishing four separate directories for the southern section of Los Angeles this year and next.

However, the telephone companies must conduct a study "to determine what classified advertising market areas and community of interest areas exist therein... so that the commission may make a determination of which of the various reasonable directory configurations best serve the need and convenience of calling subscribers."

The commission also authorized the shift of Gardena classified listings from the Compton directory to the Torrance-Lomita-San Pedro directory, and specified that Gardena alphabetical listings be excluded from the Mid-Cities (Compton-Downey) directory and included in the South Bay area directory.
