THE STORK'S NEST

In a country where the storks came annually to spend the summer there lived a peasant family.
The storks built a nest on their low thatched roof. This was an omen of good luck and great care was given to their protection. There were two small boys in the family and it was a day of rejoicing when the familiar honk, honk was heard on the arrival of the storks. This pair continued to come for seven years, when an accident occurred and there was delay beyond the usual time for their return, but one day the honk was heard and there was great joy with the boys, for they had learned to love the two birds, and the love was returned.
However, on going out they discovered that the male stork had come alone. Something had happened.

The lonely fellow did not stay long. On the third day he gave the signal of departure and away he sailed in the air and was soon out of sight. These two boys had become big boys and spent many happy hours watching the storks and studying their habits; so they grieved for the loss of their companionship, but in a few days Mr.
Stork returned, bringing with him a new mate. They both seemed very happy walking around the beautiful lake among the flowers and grass, catching the fish and all kinds of nice bits of food that such birds love best.

By and by the two boys spied two beautiful eggs in the nest on the roof, and one boy said to the other:
"Wouldn't it be fun to slip these stork eggs out and put two goose eggs in place of them and see what they would do with them?"

"Agreed!" said the other.
So off they ran to a goose nest and exchanged household plans with the fowl. (Foul play, wasn't it? I should say.) They waited impatiently to see the end of their fun.
At last it came. They were out in the yard very busy at work when they heard such a clatter on the roof. They had to drop their tools and run to see what appeared to them the most murderous scene that could ever happen.

Mr. Stork had in his beak a poor little nestling. He shook it and pounded it on the roof until it was killed. Then taking the other one he gave a similar treatment with the same effect. Then he seized the mother bird and shook and pecked and thumped her until she fell limp at his feet. Then he flew as high as he could, circled round and was soon out of sight.

These boys felt bad for the mischief they had done. They went up on the roof to gather up the remains and found the mother bird still alive. So they brought her down and nursed her faithfully until she recovered, and one day a lock was passing on a tour to the south and the forsaken bride joined her companions, and that was the end of the storks.

A CAMP MEETING IN THE WHEATFIELD

When I was a little girl I went out to play with my two brothers and some little girls who had come in to spend a Saturday afternoon.
My father had gone to the country to hold a two days' meeting, and the coast was clear for a big time.
We decided we would play holding a meeting. All agreed. We made a bee line for the wheat field, where we could hold forth in the high wheat that was waving its tall halfripe grain invitingly to eight romping, frolicsome youngsters. We bent down the wheat and were not long in satisfying ourselves that we had, as "Bud" said, a regular amphitheater and there we camped.

We sang, then prayed, and then called up mourners, all of us went and kneeled down and the boys stood up and sang and preached, and we mourned and cried and made a great racket like we had seen some folks do. Then after we had carried on until some of the little girls did get up a cry we dismissed and scattered off to the orchard and forgot all about the wheatfield.

On Monday we were summoned to appear before our father, who said that it appeared to him the cattle had broke into the wheatfield or

HONEY—SOMETHING FOR THE HOUSEWIFE

Until recently honey has been looked upon as a luxury and not as it really is—a health-giving food.
Perhaps this was on account of too meager knowledge of the product.
In his "list of foods containing all the elements of nutrition," Eugene Christian, one of the greatest food scientists in the country, says:
"These articles (honey) contain no starch whatever, yet they are richer in true carbohydrates than the grains and bread products." What food could be more healthful than the nectar from the very heart of flowers? From the time the honey is stored in the cells by the bees until it is taken from the hive the home is touched only by the bees themselves.

It might be interesting for the prospective buyer to know some of the plants yielding honey in his vicinity. A few of the most common are alfalfa, lima bean, eucalyptus, wild sunflowers and the little plant in the lawns, carpet grass, or lippia.
Before the honey is removed by the beekeeper it is thoroughly ripened and so made digestible by the bees.
Here comes a step in the preparation of the product few people are familiar with. Perhaps on some honey you chanced to buy you saw the label with these words: "Pure Extracted Honey." You were naturally confused by the second word "extracted." After the honey is removed from the hive the thin wa-cappings that cover the honey are cut off with a steaming hot knife.
The comb or frame is then slipped into the baskets of a large machincalled an extractor. Here the honey is thrown from the combs by centrifugal force. Before the honey is run in the big tanks to ripen it is strained to remove all impurities.
It is left in the tanks for a couple of weeks, when all the remaining foreign matter is skimmed from the top, leaving it one of the most pure products known to man at the present time.

There is in the United States alone over five thousand men or women engaged in the production of honey as an occupation. An apriary in Southern California is small if it contains one hundred colonies. There are some apiarists owning and managing one thousand colonies of bees within one hundred miles from here. In no other State in the Union is honey production so well developed as in this great state of ours.

Have you ever noticed how pleased the children are with some bread and honey? "Um, um!" they say.
But how about you and hubby?
You've had hot muffins and luscious honey, too. Well, let's stop talking. Try it again for breakfast tomorrow.
WM. FENNELL.

something dreadful had happened.
We were called to account, confessed our guilt and received our reward, and what we didn't know about holding a camp meeting we then learned to a tune that was never forgotten.
