Attacks Gag Policy of U. S. Says Karolyi Action Absurd

SAMUEL UNTERMYER, famous Democratic leader and New York attorney, in a recent speech attacked the governmental policy which was carried out in the recent gagging of Count Karolyi of Hungary and the sentencing of Roger N. Baldwin to six months' imprisonment for "peacefully insisting on making a speech."

The War Said to Be Over

"I refer, of course, to the cases of Count Karolyi and Roger N. Baldwin. The vicious precedent of the gagging of Count Karolyi by our state department presents a question of national importance. Assuming that he would have assailed the present monarchical government of his country, where and since when has our state department secured the right to deny this attribute of political refuge to a distinguished foreigner unless it be by resort to the emergency war legislation abridging freedom of speech, which was supposed to have died with the termination of the war?"

"What a travesty upon our vaunted freedom that Count Karolyi should be able to cross our border into a monarchical government and there, with impunity and without offending against its laws, exercise the privilege of free speech that has been denied him here!"

"The truth is that, while the trend of governments that make no claim to our vaunted liberty has been ever since the war toward the priceless boon and symbol of liberty typified by freedom of speech, the attitudes of our courts and legislative bodies have been steadily drifting toward the destruction of that priceless heritage."

"The apathy and callousness of our people in the face of this peril is the most regrettable and astounding feature of the situation."

Jersey Courts Rapped

The Baldwin case, in Mr. Untermyer's opinion, is equally significant of this tendency of the times.

"A court of New Jersey," he told his audience, "has dug up out of the oblivion of the distant past a forgotten state statute of 1796 as the basis on which it has sentenced Mr. Baldwin to six months imprisonment for peacefully insisting on making a speech (which he was not permitted to deliver or even to begin) in connection with the silk workers' strike in Paterson."

"I have no doubt this action will be reversed on appeal, but the mere fact such a thing could happen in the administration of our laws is ominous."

What You Owe Your Children A Sound Mind in a Sound Body

WHAT do parents owe their children? A sound mind in a sound body. That is all.

He that has these two has little more to wish for; and he that wants either of them will be but little the better for anything else.

John Locke observed that men's happiness or misery is in most part of their own making—"he whose mind directs not wisely will never take the right way; and he whose body is crazy and feeble will never be able to advance in it."

"I confess," he wrote, "there are some men's constitutions of body and mind so vigorous and well framed by nature that they need not much assistance from others; but by the strength of their natural genius they are from their cradles carried towards what is excellent, and by the privilege of their happy constitutions are able to do wonders."

"But examples of this kind are but few; and I think I may say that, of all men we meet with, nine parts of them are what they are, good or evil, useful or not, by their education."

Locke wrote this in the seventeenth century. In the light of our increased knowledge of men's minds and inner natures, we disagree with him today concerning the relative importance of heredity and education, but the latter still is the greatest single factor in man's existence once he is born.

Education is not all a matter of books. The parent's duty is not done when he sends his child to school regularly.

We repeat, the parent's duty to his child is simple—a sound mind in a sound body; but this end is not to be gained entirely in the schoolhouse. The parent must accomplish the biggest part of the task.

The parent must always keep in mind that the little or almost insensible impressions on our tender infancies have important and lasting consequences; and there it is, as in the fountains of some rivers, where a gentle application of the hand turns the flexible waters in channels that make them take quite ordinary courses; and by this direction, given them first in their source, they receive different tendencies, and arrive at last at very remote and distant places.

Affairs of the Heart

By Mrs. Thompson

Such situations as the one described in the letter below sometimes end in tragedy of one sort or another. When they result only in pain and unhappiness, it is because one or the other of the persons concerned has the clear spiritual sight to perceive the danger and wrongness of their predicament and the impossibility of any right or happy solution, and severs the relation by the clean cut of flight. A young man writes:

Dear Mrs. Thompson: I am a young man of 21. Being an orphan, circumstances placed me in the home of a successful professional man. I was treated like one of the family by these, the only parents that I ever knew. Unfortunately and unintentionally I came into possession of that love which rightfully belonged to my benefactor and friend, but had never been his. Having a keen sense of right and wrong, I gave up my happy home, although they pleaded with me to remain. Her letters came frequently. I answered them in only a general way. Finally a letter came saying that she was going to throw me out of her life. She does not know that I have loved her all these years. Already I have sacrificed a happy home and have suffered professionally and financially. Must I help her do that which will be worse than death for me if she succeeds? Please don't suggest forming new acquaintances. I enjoy the friendship of many of the nice girls of my own age. But girls my age are usually realistic and I am an idealist. Hence "the aims of their existence are not mine."

E. S.

You are acting as you should. Don't falter now, when you need every particle of your moral stamina to resist temptation. Stand firm. Either do not answer this woman's last letter, or, better, write her that you are glad she has reached the right decision. It will not be "worse than death" for you. Once the final wrench is over you will have a sense of freedom from an obsession which long has dominated you, a satisfying knowledge that you are the "captain of your soul." You are very young, and it is natural you should think that this experience is going to be a permanent blight upon your happiness. But it isn't. As time goes on it will recede into its proper place as an unfortunate episode, an early test of your character from which you emerged unscathed. A complete change of environment would be of great help to you in putting this thing out of your life. Emotionally, mark time for a while. Put all your thoughts into business success for the time being.

The woman who breaks up another woman's home has no defense. Yet she always tries to find an excuse. A girl writes me:

Dear Mrs. Thompson: I have faith in your advice to young men and young women. I wish you would give me some. I am a girl of 19, very good looking, with blue eyes and brown hair. I weigh 155. I am deeply in love with a married man in this city, a married man with a number of children. He seems to care for me as much as I care for him, but we never have the opportunity to be together much, as his wife is of a very jealous nature. Now, Mrs. Thompson,

I could not live without this man, but still I hate to break up his home. Shall I leave town on account of this man? Please advise me. ALMA.

Really, Alma, I can't understand you. Surely you don't expect me to tell you to go ahead and break up this man's home! I think it is very foolish for you to say you, a girl of 19, cannot live without this man. Do you think that a man who is faithless to his wife and children is to be trusted? I have no sympathy for you.

To those who answered E. J.: Thanks for your letters. I intend to devote a column to them as soon as the space is available. I might say for the benefit of others who read E. J.'s letter in this column recently that she has brought down a storm of disapproval. Not a single letter approves her philosophy of marriage. However, most of the letters condemning her are from men.

BUBBLES: The young man owes you an apology. But, at your age, don't worry over whether a young man loves you.

MISS B. M.: A girl cannot afford to be forward with men; she must wait for them to make the advances. Go on being likable and good-humored, and a "knight" will come riding by your castle.

BROWN EYES: Respectable girls give kisses only to their fiancé. Your sister is too young to "keep company."

JEAN: You have been cruelly misinformed. There is no reason why you should not marry the man of your choice and be happy in all the ways married people are happy, including the blessing of children.
