AFFAIRS of the HEART

By Mrs. Thompson

Love undergoes a change after marriage; it grows calmer and deeper, but it loses its fire. This explains why a married man may love his wife as a part of himself, but enjoy playing with the fire of another flirtation.

A wife writes me: Dear Mrs. Thompson: I am a married woman with three small children. I have a good husband and I love him better than my life. Sometime ago he fell in love with a young girl, going to school and only fourteen years old. She is not a nice girl, but I used to think she was. I was surely surprised when I found she had stolen my husband's heart from me.

Dear Mrs. Thompson: I am 23 years old and engaged to a young man about a year older than myself. He is highly thought of by every one and although he does not make much money now, I believe he will when he has worked longer.

rather be dead than live all my life as we are now. Sometimes I think he is tired of me because I am not as good-looking as other women. But I try to make up for it and do everything I can for him. Sometimes I get very discouraged and wish I could end it all. Maybe he would not miss me much while the other girl is near. Please let me hear from you.

BROKEN-HEARTED MOTHER.

You are cheating yourself out of happiness with your husband because you are a victim of worry and jealousy. Since your husband has told you that he cares more for you than any one else in the world, take his word for it. Your unhappiness and suspicion alone would make him uneasy in your presence and keep him from being happy at home. It would be quite possible for your husband to love you devotedly and at the same time enjoy a flirtation with another woman. Such a situation would not be ideal by any means, but it should not be serious enough to spoil your happiness. Put all disloyal thoughts out of your mind and fight with yourself for the faith you had in him formerly.

HE WANTS HER TO MARRY HIM, BUT HE CAN'T SUPPORT HER

Dear Mrs. Thompson: I am 23 years old and engaged to a young man about a year older than myself. He is highly thought of by every one and although he does not make much money now, I believe he will when he has worked longer. He begs me to get married and promises that if I keep on working for a while, giving us a start, he will work hard, too, and in two or three years be able to support me. My better judgment tells me to wait two or three years until we know the he will be able to support a family. I want children and I want my husband to be a woman who has to work every day just as her husband does can't have them. Probably you will say that if I loved the man I would want to marry him regardless of circumstances. I do want to marry him but it hurts me to think I would ask me to go on working. What would you advise me to do?

ALICE RUTH: Consult a physician regarding the condition of your skin. It is evident that the trouble is too deep-seated to be cured with lotions and creams.

Shakespeare tells us that "who steals my purse steals trash . . . but he who filches from me my good name . . . makes me poor indeed." A wife writes:

Dear Mrs. Thompson: I am a married woman and have a good husband and two children, aged 14 and 12. I come from a good family and have always led a clean and straight life. We have a large house and rent out two rooms upstairs for light housekeeping to a young couple. A few days ago a friend came to my husband and told him the young lady upstairs has been using my name when she goes stepping out with other men. She has a lovely husband and I don't think he knows that she steps out as she does. He works in the same office as my husband and is a friend of my husband, and we don't want to cause any trouble with him. But we don't want to have this going on any longer. Do you think I should go to her husband and tell him what she is doing, or go to her first, or let them both know that I know it? I have been considering ordering them out, as she has been getting quite disagreeable lately. MRS. E. C.

your name by other persons, and then let the matter rest, for this no doubt will be sufficient. She probably will misrepresent the matter to her husband, but do not permit this to provoke you to telling him. If, however, she should continue to use your name after they move out, then you would be justified in appealing to her husband.

A PROHIBITION DRUNKARD Dear Mrs. Thompson: I am a married woman of 25 years. My husband is much older than I. He is 44. We have four children, two boys and two girls. My trouble is that my husband drinks. He comes home drunk every night. He picks up furniture and breaks it to pieces, and if he is very drunk he breaks up dishes also. I dread the time when he comes. I do not know what to do.

TROUBLED HAZEL. The sort of stuff that men buy from bootleggers today makes wild men of all of them. Endeavor to find out where he gets his liquor, and then inform the prohibition officers, in care of the postoffice, by letter. He probably will find another place, but cutting off one source of supply may bring him to his senses. If this fails, go to his employer and ask him to help you. It is rare that a wife's pleadings reform a drunkard.
