How to Make Novel and Handsome Boutonnieres of Crepe Twist

By JULIA BOTTOMLEY

HERE is something new in the way of boutonniere flowers made out of crepe twist. They are really very handsome, and the best of it is that the woman who follows instructions can, at trifling cost, fashion a corsage to match every frock of harmonize with every coat and hat.

Nearly everyone who does fancywork is familiar with crepe twist. Wherever one can buy materials for paper flower making, one can buy crepe twist.

If you have ever made wool yarn flowers, and where in the woman who are not you will find no difficulty in making crepe-twist flowers, for the process is very simple.

To make either the daisies or the chrysanthemum, as pictured here, take a strip of cardboard one-half wide for the daisies or two inches for the chrysanthemum. Lay a piece of thin wire or a strand of the crepe twist lengthwise along the center of one side of the cardboard. Then begin to wind crepe twist over and over both the cardboard and the lengthwise strand in this manner.

The strand of crepe twist or of wire must be tied as shown. In event of using a lengthwise strand of the crepe twist as pictured, the wire will have to be fastened in afterwards, as it must serve as a stem. After fastening firmly cut the crepe twist loops all around.

flattening them into a circle so as to form the daisy. For the center cut a circle of cardboard one-half inch in diameter. Pierce two holes with a needle in the center and bring thread wire through the same to be used to wire the center into the middle of the flower. After wiring these centers pile yellow paint on them and let dry. Then when thoroughly dry, wire them into the flowers. All the wires are then twisted together and wound with green tissue paper. Green artificial leaves should be added.

The chrysanthemum is made in the same manner as the daisy except that the center is omitted and the wire formed into a rounded half ball instead of a flat circle.

For the boutonniere at the top to the right cut petals from either felt or colored kid. Buttonhole stitch them all around with crepe twist.

Women's Club Closes Year With Luncheon

Glendale Woman Installs New Club Officers

With its annual luncheon and installation of officers the Torrance Women's Club closed its year Wednesday.

A delicious luncheon was served by the June committee. The colors of yellow and orange were carried out in the table decorations. Baskets of hydrangeas were placed at each side of the stage and in the lobby. A large vase of gladiolus was placed on a table in the center of the room, while the stage were baskets of marigolds, gladiolus and a vase of beautiful roses.

Mrs. A. H. Montgomery, president of the Glendale Symphony Orchestra and a retired officer of the district, was the installing officer. In a short talk Mrs. Montgomery told of the duty of their loyalty to the club and told them that it was not right for club members to plan card parties and other entertainments on club days. Their place was in the suburb.

After each of the retiring officers had given their report of their work for the year, Frederick P. Shidler gave three piano numbers, "Spring Song," "To a Water Lily" and "Rubenstein's Waltz." Mrs. Montgomery gave a reading, "At the Opera," by Owen Mer-dith. Mrs. George P. Shidler, first vice-president of the club, presented Mrs. W. M. Brooks with a past president's pin on behalf of the club.

Although the afternoon was very pleasant, a purple thread of sorrow ran through it all, as the club thought of two of their members who had laid loved ones away to sleep during the day.

The officers for the new year are: President, Mrs. W. M. Brooks, who has consented to serve for the next year; Mrs. O. E. Fossum, first vice-president; Mrs. H. E. Reeve, second vice-president; Mrs. R. R. Howe, third vice-president;

Mrs. Dorothy Jamieson, federation secretary; Mrs. F. W. Sammons, recording secretary; Mrs. B. C. Collins, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Archie Lewis, treasurer; directors, Mrs. C. E. Chambers, Ways and Means; Mrs. E. A. Locke, Child Welfare; Dr. Minnie Proctor, Junior Auxiliary; Mrs. F. L. Parks, parliamentarian; Mrs. Isabel Henderson, member of the corporation.

Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Penicella and family of Los Angeles have recently moved to Torrance, where they have taken over the apartment house at 716 Portola.

PICNIC HAMPER
Picnic hampers can be planned to carry as suitable a meal for all members of the family as well as the home table may serve. Especial consideration should be given to the food taken along for the children. The usual meat and bun sandwiches with pickles should be reserved for the adult members of the party only.

The sandwiches for the children should be simply prepared. One side dark bread and one white with filling between of which the kiddies are especially fond. Chopped eggs or liver paste with finely chopped lettuce make a wholesome sandwich. If the grownups are to have fried chicken, prepare the children's sandwiches of shredded stewed chicken. This entails a little more work but it pays in keeping the digestive machinery in smoother running order for the children. Then, too, the broth from the stew is a good start for the family soup the next day. Individual package sandwiches are at-ways attractive to children. Thermos bottles of cool milk and warm milk cocoa are the best picnic drinks for children. Crisp molasses cookies with well ripened fruit such as apples, bananas or individual cups round out a delightful picnic supper for the children.

If the picnic meal comes at dinner time it should be planned so as to conform to the usual family dinner menu. Meats may be broiled and the younger children served very small pieces, and scalloped potatoes or baked lima beans served to all. Sandwiches of lettuce, peanut butter, and jam, fruit cookies and milk (coffee for the adult members of the party) provide an ample picnic dinner.

All-day, large picnic gatherings are trying on the children's nerves and stomachs if they are allowed to romp and eat at will. Family picnics with but a few guests and forethought given to the right kind of food served can be made a good recreation for every member of the family.
