STATE PICNICS

WYOMING Remember that your annual summer picnic reunion will be held July 4th-August 4th, in Bycamore Grove Park, Los Angeles. Bring your dinner with you or you can buy eats in the park. Coffee and souvenir badges will be supplied.

NEW MEXICO, ARIZONA NEVADA

All former residents of these states are cordially invited to their annual picnic reunion in Bigby Park, Long Beach, all day, Wednesday, (not Saturday), July 31. This will be the low special rate day over the P. E. road, open to all who care to go. Silk souvenir badges, coffee will be provided. Each state will have its separate section and separate county registers. There will be a fine program opening at two o'clock with addresses, music and community singing by all. Special speakers are invited for each state.

My Impressions of Our Cousins Across the Sea

(Continued from Page 1) vided up into small holdings by stone walls and Hawthorne hedges, with clumps of trees here and there to break the monotony. You will find very little of the land under cultivation as under the surface of this beautiful carpet lies a very many formations, so the little farms are used to pasture sheep and cattle, and the farmers, they do not wish to build on their place, but a number of them gather together and form a small cluster of houses, like little villages and go back and forth to their farms when there is work to be done. This is a custom brought out of the past when it was found necessary to group themselves together for protection, against the outlaws or bandits, whose pastime was to collect toll from the countryside.

Not Always Raining. It did not rain all the time. The sun was quite generous and spread its warm rays occasionally for several hours at a time.

Like California, England also enjoys some unusual weather, and this year was the exception, as we had very little rain, from February to June. This was very pleasant for one who wanted to get about and enjoy the country, but, disastrous to the community, because one of England's large industries is the manufacture of fine woven cotton fabrics, which is made possible on account of the damp atmosphere which always prevails there. You can readily understand that our wonderful dry climate, where the sun shines 300 days out of each year and which we are capitalizing, would bring very little over there.

The English People. Now a word about the people. I am rather ashamed of my former impressions, and I wonder where we conceive such ideas. I found them to be very normal people, very much like ourselves, except perhaps more courteous and very considerate of others' feelings.

I had many opportunities of meeting them in my travels, as well as socially. It is true they are rather distant or I might say reserved, but once you break through that veneer, you find a real man. In fact, I find the English speaking people are much alike, wherever they may be, and we have very much in common. We have the same ideas and ideals; viz: to get married, raise families, educate our children and fit them to take their place in this old world, as self-respecting citizens. At the same time, we are all endeavoring to lay away a little of our worldly means in preparation for that rainy day, which we all fear will eventually overtake us later in our lives.

The English Reserve. The reserve or dignity with which the Englishman as a rule surrounds himself, I am led to believe is merely super-sensitiveness, because he does not like to misunderstand and fears to appear ridiculous. In other words it is very hard for him to let go of himself and play as we do. But they are very sincere and just as friendly as we are. Their impressions of us is about as wrong as our impressions of them. What we both need is a better understanding of each other's points of view, which I believe would bring about that much desired condition of world peace.

As a people we are very fortunate indeed. The laboring man in our country receives a wage that enables him to enjoy many of the luxuries of life. He is able to clothe his children properly and educate them so that they are self-respecting and can aspire to the highest our nation can give. Conditions on the other side are not so favorable. Very few of the working people can afford an automobile, no matter how reasonable it would be. And even if he managed to purchase one, the taxes and price of petrol (gasoline) would prohibit the use of it. The road tax alone is $5.00 per horse power. Therefore a bicycle is about as high as his ambition dares aspire to.

Class distinction still exists over there to a considerable extent; viz: the workingman does not associate with the business or professional man. Nor do the middle class aspire to associate with royalty. They do not resent this condition. It just is not being done, and is the natural condition under a monarchy.

Loyal to King. They are all very loyal to the King, and would not have it otherwise. Personally, I believe they have a very loving and kind sovereign who has their welfare at heart and is doing everything in his power to better their condition.

Great Britain, composed of England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales, is certainly a country full of romance and history. As you travel throughout the countries, one sees many vast estates of the titled gentry, old castles, abbeys and palaces. Some are in ruins, while others are in a remarkable state of preservation. Some of these historical places date back to the 10th century. Some of these particularly through the Wosochs, and around her famous Lochs. A very pretty and interesting spot is Sterling, with its castle and Wallace monument, from whose top one can get a view of the surrounding country for miles. Sterling is situated in a beautiful valley. The River Forth winds in and out around the town several times like a snake in its wanderings. If one is interested in ancient Scottish history, they could stand on the spot under the flagstaff which marks the place where the famous battle of Bannockburn was fought, and where the Scots repulsed the Britons and in memory, the green fields would soon be colored crimson.

The town of Sterling is very interesting and characteristic of many small towns in Scotland and England, houses of stone and streets of stone, also. The streets are narrow and crooked, winding in and out among the buildings, like wide paths, and never in straight lines. Some of the houses are very old, and lean over very badly, giving the appearance of being tired and leaning on one another for support. Wonderfully interesting places that artists like to paint and describe—a place to dream in.

To take a trip down the banks of the Clyde and see one large ship yard after another as far as the eye can reach in either direction, with their overhanging cranes and derricks practically standing idle, as if resting after a hard day's work, one wonders will they ever be busy again. We hope so, but may it be in manufacturing vessels of peace instead of war.

Edinburgh. Edinburgh is a beautiful clean, and picturesque city with its castle on a high hill overlooking the city, and Holyrood palace nestling in the valley below.

One feels rather disappointed in not seeing the inhabitants of Scotland clad in their picturesque costume, the kilts. But I will have to tell you the truth. Only the guards at the castle and palace wear the kilts, which happens to be their uniform. As one mixes with the crowd or observes them at a distance it is hard to realize you are in a foreign country, because aside from a slight accent one could imagine themselves to be at home. There is so little difference.

Glasgow—and the Lakes. Glasgow, being a large manufacturing city is very dirty on account of the coal burned in the factories, etc.

One could go on indefinitely calling attention to the many historical and beautiful places on the British Isles, but time and space will not allow. However, I must mention the beautiful Lake region of England. It consists of several lakes hidden away among the rolling hills which in turn are covered with wonderful forests and shrubbery. Some of these lakes are several miles in extent and are celebrated resorts.

Wales. South of England you cross the line at the old city of Chester into Wales. Here the country becomes rougher and mountainous, but with beautiful valleys, rivers and forests.

Development Lags. While England is a very old country, it is very far behind us in development. Their average homes are not nearly as modern as ours. Gas lamps are still used in many cities. Some parts of London get their street illumination from the old fashioned gas lamp.

Few Traffic Rules. The city of Manchester which has a population of several hundred thousand, has no signal system to handle traffic, depending upon the traffic police to direct same by hand signalling. Pedestrians cross the street in the middle of the block or when they please. During the busy hours of the day or afternoon the congestion is very bad. The tram cars are of the double deck type, and there is a steady stream coming and going. Buses run everywhere and connect with all the principal cities. Horse drawn wagons are in common use. Big heavy motor lorries (trucks) help knock the traffic. Then comes the steam lorry, which looks like a miniature locomotive, pushing through the streets, belching smoke and cinders from its stack. Errand boys and workmen dashing in and out among the other vehicles, riding bicycles and an occasional push cart being propelled by a man—and you have a picture of a busy day on the streets of Manchester.

Unemployment Situation. Just a word about the unemployment situation. There are thousands of people out of work. The majority of coal mines in England and Wales are closed down, and the ones that are being worked are on part time. Many of the large factories usually kept busy manufacturing machinery and supplies used in the collieries are also closed down. Many of the large cotton and woolen-mills are closed down, the balance are working only part time and naturally other industries directly and indirectly connected with these large enterprises are suffering on account of the depression.

The cause for this deplorable condition are many and varied, but I haven't time to go into the various reasons for same at the present time. Enough to know that the condition as described exists.

The Dole System. To relieve the want and distress caused by so many being out of work, the government created what is known as the unemployment insurance act, generally called the Dole act, which gives every workman who has been thrown out of employment about 13 shillings or $3.40 per week. The burden of which is placed as follows: One-third is paid by the employee; one-third by the employer, and one-third by the government.

No Complaints. The wonderful part of this, and I might say the pathetic part, also is that they never complain. They look upon it as their big problem, and like the unconquerable Briton of old, they have their backs to the wall and with a smile on their faces, are fighting one of the greatest battles ever fought without any hands or cheering crowds to help them.

That is the reason I say the yare a wonderful people. We should feel proud that they are kin to us. And I am sure you all feel as I do, that they are deserving of our respect and friendship.

Perhaps this insight into what others are doing under very unfavorable conditions will help us to be more charitable and tolerant toward some of our people who are not so fortunate as ourselves, and out of work. As one who has lived among these friendly neighbors of ours across the sea, and who has learned to understand them and appreciates their earnest desire for a better understanding between the two English speaking countries and believing that the people in this country are desirous of creating more friendly feeling, I earnestly hope this little rambling talk will in a small way, at least help to create a better understanding, which is so necessary to a step toward world peace, and that I feel, is the earnest desire of all right thinking people.

Yours very truly, RICHARD R. SMITH.

A local organization serves your Telephone

Altho your telephone in an important and very personal way. Because communication with cities far away, your telephone company is not a far-distant affair. It is in reality a local institution,—its employees and managers are your own neighbors. We who serve your telephone are members of your service clubs, your church, your lodge. Our children go to school with your children. Like you, we are engaged in common tasks of local citizenship. You permit us to serve your home and business in an important and very personal way. Because we are your neighbors interested in your interests, and knowing your problems, we know what you expect of your telephone. And we are anxious to see that you get it. Each year sees a steady advance in the telephone art. But your telephone will never become so efficient that its service to you is not dependent upon the zeal of a human organization, right here in your community, giving intelligent and courteous attention to your wishes.
