News From Washington

By Your Congressman
CHARLES J. GOLDEN

After suffering repeated defeats the Wheeler-Rayburn bill for the regulation of utility holding companies finally triumphed. The so-called "death sentence" was rewritten in new language before the die-hards would accept it. The opponents of this much discussed part of the bill formerly referred to it as a lynching provision of the law. The new version of the same section disposes of the hang-rope and now merely provides for a sleep anaesthetic, but if enforced it will bring about a great reform in the operations and manipulations of the unscrupulous companies that have been wringing millions of profits that rightfully belong to the consumers and to the investors.

In the last battle over the "death sentence" Sam Rayburn of Texas again led for the bill and George Huddleston of Alabama was the wary and eloquent leader determined to defeat it. But in this final struggle, Mr. Rayburn had marshaled a clever strategy that wiped out the militant majority opposition and led his supporters and the new administration to a marvelous victory.

When the conference committee returned the bill for final passage there was a calm discussion in which the heated brows had cooled, tempers were softened and the fighting members healed each others wounds with words of peace and mutual commendation.

In spite of the most powerful and unscrupulous lobby that probably ever assailed the members of Congress, and in spite of the $5,000,000 estimated expenditures of the holding companies' lobbyists, notwithstanding the thousands upon thousands of telegrams and the constant pouring of letters from every corner of the country, this bitterly contested bill was finally passed with 222 votes for it and but 112 votes against it. The absentees numbered 96, which plainly discloses that some of the members who could not take it, had fled to the woods.

With a clear-cut majority of 110 votes, President Roosevelt once more asserted his leadership, which on different occasions had received a decided rebuff from the powerful holding companies who have for years so successfully defied the agencies of government all the way from the local municipality to the federal government itself.

Now that the law has been enacted, the battle will be transferred to the courts of the land and the supreme court will have the final word.

Topers On "Indian List"
GLOBE, Ariz. (U.P.)—Globe's habitual toppers had a bad day. They were unable to purchase anything. The reason was an "Indian list" ordinance adopted by the city council. The law requires that the police post a list of names of the habitual drunkards in all liquor stores and bars in the city, and forbids clerks and bartenders to sell them intoxicants.

committee for some months, was passed by the House in fairly good shape. When it reached the Senate, it had so many amendments and extraneous matter attached to it that it did not look like the same bill sent from the House to the Senate. The bill had so much tinkering and patching that it was gravely endangered, but it was finally worked through and passed both houses. It contained a provision for authorizing the Parker Dam, which is of tremendous interest to the Metropolitan Water District to the people of Southern California. It looked for a while like Parker Dam would be lost in this runaway bill, but it was rescued by adroit strategy and the building of the Parker Dam can now proceed.

There was much weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth in the bitter-stare districts because of the Senate's action in cutting out the kegs and barrels in the liquor control bill. Over in the Senate the bottles won and the House was forced to recede from its recognition of the old fashioned oak barrel that had the reputation of giving ripeness and mellowness and flavor to the so-called rejuvenating spirits in which some people are inclined to participate.

In the bitter contest in the conference committee, which was waged between the House and the Senate on the banking bill, both sides were obliged to make concessions in order to save the bill. The Senate succeeded in forcing five bankers on the Federal Reserve Board, although the House was very much opposed to this provision. But the House did succeed in strengthening government control over the Federal Reserve system, although there is much yet to be accomplished on this very vital question. The bill retains the broadening of the collateral of the Federal Reserve system and includes real estate securities. This is a very important provision in the revised law.

The President has signed the social security bill for old age pensions, annuities for workers and aid to the state for the care of mothers, crippled children and the blind, and is now the law of our country. This measure, like other important acts of this administration will be attacked in the courts and again, the supreme court will have the final word. The most important feature of this legislation is the establishment of the principle of approval by the supreme court. The establishment of a new principle in legislation that provides a fundamental change is of vast importance. The recent decision of the supreme court declaring the previous railway retirement act unconstitutional, has caused a very careful revision of pension legislation. All of which is a warning that however generous and benevolent our purposes are in trying to establish a New Deal and a new order, there are dignitaries of the supreme court, clothed in black robes and crowned with gray hair, who finally determine the fate of all good legislative intentions.

The outstanding legislation of the session of the 74th Congress includes the appropriation of nearly $5,000,000,000 for relief and recovery. Probably the most fundamental legislation of this session was the enactment of the social security law, and the increase of taxes on swollen fortunes and incomes. The holding company legislation was another measure of outstanding importance. The banking act was also important. It has made a guarantee of deposits a permanent policy. The strengthening of the T. V. A. act and the authorizing of the Grand Coulee in the Northwest establishes the third great power plan which will rival Boulder Dam and the Tennessee Valley power projects.

GROCERY STORE-Y

Days of the cracker barrel and the cast iron stove have been left far behind in modern grocery merchandising.

In celebrating the twentieth anniversary of Safeway Stores, Inc., this month, officials of the company checked through old files to find examples of the popular stores of a generation ago. The photograph in the upper right hand corner shows one of the "top notch" grocery outlets of the earlier period.

In the larger picture, below, is shown one of the company's newer stores, replete with the highest quality merchandise and the latest equipment to assure proper sanitation and utmost convenience.

The original Safeway store was opened in the Summer of 1915, in American Falls, Idaho. Its founder was Reverend S. M. Skaggs, who planned the store to cut down the high cost of living for members of the little pioneer community. His son, M. B. Skaggs, later took over the management of the store. It was only after many years of thrift and privation that the business finally reached a basis from which gradual expansion was possible.

Besides saving millions of dollars in food costs annually for its customers and furnishing employment for 17,000 persons, Safeway has also become the most important outlet for leading Western farm products.

A PROJECT AS BIG AS THE PANAMA CANAL

RIGHT IN YOUR OWN BACK YARD

THERE is no Panama Canal in Southern California but there is an equally great—if not as well known—achievement rivalling it in bigness of conception, cost of execution and contribution to industrial development.

In order to supply Central and Southern California with low-cost electrical power, the citizens who compose the Edison Company completed several almost unbelievable engineering feats. An army of thousands of men marched into the mountains and harnessed the waters of the High Sierras. At times as many as 8,000 men were employed. In one instance they worked years, blasting a tunnel through more than 13 miles of virgin granite.

Instead of locks, they built huge dams; and erected 5 hydro-electric power plants—to serve the millions living in this territory. The result of the combined effort of thousands of California workers and investors is economical power—flowing constantly, day and night—to light a single lamp or turn the wheels of the largest factory.
