FIFTH CHAPTER of "I'LL TELL THE WORLD"

The Romance and Thrills of Newsgathering for the United Press

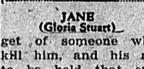

A Novelization of Universal's Screenplay of the Same Name

Written by Lincoln Quarberg and Frank Wead. Adapted by Dale Van Every and Ralph Spence. FIFTH INSTALLMENT

SYNOPSIS: Being a correspondent for the United Press, a world-wide newsgathering organization, is a lot of fun, decides Stanley Brown as, in the guise of an old man, he leans heavily on a beautiful blonde in the gardens of the old Hotel Europa, at Vichy. He has come to Europe to find out why efforts are being made to kill the Archduke Ferdinand, an ancient royalist. His rival, Briggs, of Confederated Press, is going to learn the same thing. Brown has forgotten Briggs, however. The stunning girl, attired in shorts and riding a bicycle, has collided with his wheel chair, and is now trying to help him recover from shock. He has disguised himself as a helpless old man to outwit Briggs.

The beautiful, blonde young woman was all solitude. Brown continued to stimulate entire helplessness and to reveal in the situation as she managed to drag him to a bench in the sunny, flower-scented garden. Here, she held him with both her arms about him. He pillowed his head on her shoulder, taking full advantage of a girl's obligingness.

And he kept thinking that what he was doing was more interesting than gathering news, and that Archduke Ferdinand, target of someone who wanted to kill him, and his royalist dinner to be held that evening at the hotel, could go hang, for all he cared. A beautiful girl in a bicycling costume! Her arms about him! He had on her shoulder! He'd been waiting years for a break like this!

JANE HAMILTON

She suggested that he was terribly weak, and his reply had a double meaning for he told her that he usually gave in without a struggle! She again lifted his supposedly paralyzed arm. When she released it, it fell limply to his side. She asked him if it had always been that way, her voice rich with sympathy and compassion, and he replied that it always had been. But his other arm tightened around her waist!

"This one seems to be in pretty good shape!" she exclaimed, looking down at it. He replied with a slang expression. By this time, his use of American slang and his mannerisms led her to wonder just how old and crippled he really was. She was studying him carefully when Adolph, the water bearer, appeared around the corner of the hedge.

"Time for your water, sir!" he said. "Your nerves—"

Brown was goaded to desperation. "Scoundrel, pinhead!" was his angry reply.

The girl was amazed at this unexpected outburst. "But, sir—you're way behind schedule—and puffing heavily!" Adolph pointed out. Brown turned to his now mystified companion.

MAKES HIMSELF AT HOME

"How long've you been over?" he asked. "You think I'm an American?" she parried. "I know it." "And who are you?" she demanded. "I'm Stanley Brown." "I'm Jane Hamilton—from Baltimore."

"Baltimore! Well, well! This is a coincidence! And we meet over here! Well, it only goes to show!" "Oh, are you from Baltimore?" She was suddenly apprehensive. "No, I'm from Brooklyn. That's the coincidence," he explained. "You being from 'way down in Baltimore—and me being from 'way up in Brooklyn. Isn't it odd!" He resumed pushing the chair. They were silent.

Eventually, Jane said: "Here's where I get off." "Let me carry you in," he volunteered. He appeared highly enthusiastic over this idea. "No thanks—I think I can make it," she said. She leaped lightly out of the wheel-chair. She started for the hotel entrance without the trace of a limp. It was his turn to be surprised.

"Thanks for the buggy ride, Mr. Brown," she said, gaily. "Hey! Wait a minute—" he pleaded. "I—I—" "Maybe I'll bump into you again," was the unsatisfying rejoinder. She hurried into the lobby.

"Yeah—come up and wreck me sometime!" he called after her. He stood for a moment, grinning at the thought of the way he had been out-generaled. Then he remembered his disguise, and quickly straightened out his great coat, muffler, goggles and cap. Briggs might be around, snooping. He climbed back in his wheel-chair and started back to his own quarters.

Jane returned to her apartments in the east wing of the hotel. There she effusively greeted her Aunt Louise. The aunt was stern-faced, almost regal in her bearing. "Who was that man with the wheel-chair?" the dowager asked, her voice sharp with disapproval and suspicion.

"Just a coincidence from Brooklyn—his name's Brown," Jane replied lightly, as if to dismiss the matter. "What were you doing in his chair?" the elderly woman persisted. "Taking a buggy ride, Aunty."

"Helen, how can you be so indiscreet!" rebuked the aunt. "Why, for the last hour we've completely lost sight of you! I've been simply frantic. After this, stay off bicycles. And in that costume—why, it's unthinkable!" She was genuinely shocked at the scant modern apparel.

"Not for Jane Hamilton, of Baltimore," Jane soothed. "Don't mention that ridiculous name to me again! I always told your Uncle Ferdinand that it was sheer madness to have you educated in America!" the old woman scolded.

BADLY CRIPPLED. That's what Stanley Brown pretended to be after the collision between the girl's bicycle and his wheel chair. He really wasn't hurt much, however. So little, in fact, that he was able to grasp her firmly with his right arm and snuggle his head onto her shoulder while she sympathized with him.

Two Big Meets In Middle West Held In June

Intercollegiate Championship and National A. A. U. Will Attract Many Stars

MILWAUKEE (U.P.)—Milwaukee will be host to two of the outstanding track meets of the country next month. The Central Intercollegiate Championship will be run off June 8 and the National A. A. U. Championships are scheduled for June 29 and 30. Both will be held at the Marquette University stadium.

Midwest performers will predominate in the Central meet, but outstanding stars of the entire country and a few from foreign lands will compete in the A. A. U. games. The best performers in the national championships will be selected for tours this summer to Sweden and Japan.

Because only the outstanding middle west stars will make the trip to Los Angeles for the national intercollegiate meet this year, an unprecedented entry list is assured for the 1934 Centrals. Teams will compete for the Knute K. Rockne Memorial Trophy, which was won last year by the Kansas State Teachers of Pittsburg, Kansas.

Coach Conrad M. Jennings of Marquette has received tentative entries from 19 schools. Among teams returning will be Michigan State, Notre Dame, Butler, Wisconsin, Marquette, Illinois State Normal, Western State, Grinnell, Michigan Normal and Bradley Tech.

Other schools expected to send teams include Indiana University, Geneva College, of Beaver Falls, Pennsylvania, Iowa State Teachers, Yanikon College, North Dakota University, Kansas State, Kansas State Teachers, Hillsdale, Kalamazoo and Lawrence.

The A. A. U. Championships have been underwritten by a civic committee which raised more than $7000. Members of the Junior League have started a sale of box seats.

Entry blanks have not yet been mailed out for the national championships but it is expected that renewal of the Metcalfe-Owens, Marty-Spitz, and Cunningham-Venzke feuds will be included on the program.
