MARTHA RAYE "discovered" in Trocadero

Band Singers Find Way Easy to Cinemas

The best way to get into pictures these days seems to be via the dance band singing route. Three of the stars in "Waikiki Wedding," the comedy of love under the tropic moon which comes to the Torrance theatre Sunday, got in that way.

They are Bing Crosby, who sang with Paul Whiteman's famous Rhythm Boys; Martha Raye, who sang with several bands before she appeared in the Trocadero, Hollywood, where she was "discovered," and Shirley Ross, who sang with Gus Arnheim's band.

Bob Burns, who is also in the cast, didn't sing but played his "hazooka" with Bing Crosby's band, which, in a manner of speaking is also singing, and "Wafford," a black pig who has an important role in the picture, made his debut as a singer apparently by demonstrating that old one about the pig under a fence.
